The Saturday Review represents another, but small, section of English opinion, when it finds in the election fresh reason for suspecting the value to England of an Anglo-American entente. The argument of these few people may be put thus: "America is in a mess in the Philippines. Let her get out of it as best she can. Certainly do not be so foolish as to permit England to relieve her of some mit England to relieve her of some share of the white man's burden in re-turn for some islands already organ-ized under English rule."

New Phase of the South African Trouble.

Radical Change in Secretary Chamberlain's Plan.

He Emulates President Kruger's Policy of Procrastination.

Situation Considered to Be More Hopeful-Boers Armed to the Teeth-Great Excitement at Johannesburg.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] LONDON, Sept. 2.—[By Atlantic Ca-ble. Copyright, 1899.] Judging from the surface indications, an altogether new phase seems to have come over the Transvaal crisis. The tables have been turned, and now it is Joseph Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, who proposes further conferences. In this and other respects the official negotiations present a more pacific aspect than last week. But with the bare exception of these nego-tiations, every other circumstance points to war. Whether, as has been suggested in these dispatches, higher powers than Mr. Chamberlain have interfered in the interests of peace, or whether the Sec-retary has taken a leaf out of the book of President Kruger of the Transvaal, meaning procrastination, can scarcely be determined at this stage. It is also possible, though hardly probable, that the unexpected opposition and disaffec-tion of the Dutch and descendants of the Dutch of British South Africa, acutely evinced this week, may have stayed the "mailed hand."

acutely evinced this week, may have stayed the "mailed hand."

The simplest solution, however, of these latest developments which puzzle none more than Mr. Chamberlain's out-and-out supporters, is that the extreme amiability and long-sufering paraded in this last British proposal, is merely a peace offering which precedes a sacrifice. Such steps as these make war more righteous, and English wars, though usually resulting in aggrandizement, must first be righteous to be popular, especially with the non-conformist conscience and element, and Mr. Chamberlain is not a despiser of this factor in home politics.

The foreign sentiment must be propitiated. The continental press, with few exceptions, recognizes the fairness of the English claims in the Transvaal, and President Kruger knows he can expect no outside aid, except, perhaps, in the most indirect way from Russia. All in all, putting the official formalities and secondary issues aside, the Transvaal crisis, under the surface, seems not to be greatly changed, and the settlement still lies in Kruger's hands. Whether he completely surrenders, openly defies or further evades, time alone will show.

CHAMBERLAIN'S CHARGES.

Radical Departure from His Former Methods of Diplomacy.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] LONDON, Sept. 2.—[By Atlantic Ca-ble.] The present Transvaal crisis shows a radical change in the diplomatic methods of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Joseph Chamberlain. In the negotiations following the Jameson raid, Mr. Chamberlain was criticised for the novel and indiscreet prosedure of publishing diplomatic notes even before they had time to reach the persons to whom they were ad-dressed. Now the public here is left in the dark until the publication of mutilated dispatches from Pretoria, forcest the colonical authorities to issue orces the colonial authorities to issue forces the colonial authorities to issue correct versions.

President Kruger of the Transvaal has practically offered to concede the demands of Sir Aifred Milner, the Governor of Cape Colony, and British High Commissioner of South Africa, regarding the question of franchise, but only on condition of getting im-possible concessions regarding suze-rainty.

Sir Alfred, in his conference with the Transvaal Executive, recently held at Bloemfontein, told President Kruger in the plainest language that, "I do not intend to buy the franchise with any other questions."

That remark accurately represents the position today. Hopefulness lies in the fact, however, that Kruger seems to be in a yielding mood, and that the imperial government is not anxious to force matters unduly.

ASQUITH'S OPINION.

Transvaal Question Ought to Be Settled by Diplomacy. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

LONDON, Sept. 2.-[By Atlantic Cale.] Rt. Hon. Herbert Asquith, formerly Home Secretary in Lord Rose-bery's Cabinet, addressed the Liberal association at Leven this afternoon. He said he was convinced that there is nothing in the Transvaal situation delicate and dangerous as it is, which cannot, and ought not, to be safely solved by firm, prudent diplomacy.

"I do not believe," he said, "anything has occurred or is threatened to thing has occurred or is threatened to bring us even within measurable dis-tance of a catastrophe, which would be a reproach to statesmen, a calamity to civilization, and an almost incal-culable disaster to South Africa."

TASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT 1 RENNES. Sept. 2 .- Elation is the only MENNES, sept. 2.—Elation is the only word that expresses the feelings of the Dreyfusards after today's session. The tide has turned at last, everywhere, and Dreyfus cannot be condemned after the evidence given this morning. The spirits of the morning sessions generally findall the more noteworthy. Yesterday was a fairly good day, but today's session, they claim, put the verdict out of doubt, and the judges must acquit Dreyfus.

Maj. Hartmann of the artillery oc cupied nearly half of the session with c the effect that Dreyfus, as an artillery officer, would not have displayed such ignorance regarding guns and brakes as was shown in the bordereau, while the other subjects of the bordereau were natters on which any officer could in-

Maj. Hartmann's testimony practically stood uncontested, as neither Gen. de Loye or Gen. Mercier, who replied, refuted any material point therein.

M. Havel, a member of the institute, then entered upon the grammatical aspect of the bordereau, and in vigorous but elegant language devoted himself to showing that the construction of the bordereau bristled with strong, and, in his opinion, conclusive marks of Esterhazy's handiwork, while the phraseology bore no resemblance to Dreyfus's style.

ogy bore no resemblants style, The next stage of the proceedings was the Gonse-Picquart cor The next stage of the proceduring was the reading of the Gonse-Picquart correspondence exchanged at the time Col. Picquart suspected Esterhazy and wanted Gen. Gonse to probe the matter to the bottom. This brought M. Labori to the front, and in a series of questions he brought out sharply before the court the machinations of which Col. Picquart was the victim at the hands from the moment he snowed a desire to thoroughly sift the matter.

M. Laborl, for the first time, got Gen.
Gonse to admit that he ordered the tampering with Picquart's letters in order, as he said, to ascertain Picquart's doings while he was chief of the Intelligence Bureau.

A little later M. Laborl evidently disconcerted Gen. Gonse, for the latter

A little later M. Labori evidently dis-concerted Gen. Gonse, for the latter blurted out that Lleut.-Col. Henry com-mitted his forgery in order to have fresh proofs against Dreyfus. The au-dience smiled audibly at this explana-tion. Gen. Gonse then added: "But it was unnecessary, since the diplomatic dossier contained sufficient incriminating documents for Dreyfus's conviction."

diplomatic dossier contained surfaces incriminating documents for Dreyfus's conviction."

Gen. Gonse apparently meant the Panizzardi dispatch which has already ben ruled out of court. M. Labori protested indignantly, exclaiming: "There are no such documents," and then asked Gen. Gonse to enumerate the documents to which he alluded.

Col. Jouaust, president of the court, whereupon M. Labori said he reserved to himself the right to submit a formal application for these documents.

Then came the leading witness of the day, M. de Fond Lamotte, a probationer contemporaneously with Dreyfus, who is now a civil engineer, and so has no reason to fear the wrath of the military clique. The witness opened by declaring that despite the fact that he had a brother in the garrison at Rennesh e came to tell what he knew in favor of Dreyfus, and he proceeded to make a statement, which, according to the Dreyfus, and he proceeded to make a statement, which, according to the Dreyfus and he proceeded to make a statement, which, according to the Dreyfus and Esterhazy, that the latter wrote it. The witness entered into an interesting analysis of the phraseology interesting analysis of the phraseology. case. First, he recalled the fact that a circular was sent to the probationers on May 14, 1894, informing them that they must not go to the maneuvers, thus showing that the man who wrote the bordereau in August, and said "I am going to the maneuvers," could not be Dreyfus.

witness then pointed out that not be Dreyfus.

The witness then pointed out that none of the ministers, who he believed acted in good faith, were informed of the existence of this circular which, he declared, "I consider a vital point in the case."

"This circular," he continued, "shatters the prosecution, because after May 17 Dreyfus could not say, 'I am going to the maneuvers,' for then he knew he would not go, while prior to May 17, he could not have known the five documents comprised in the bordereau."

M. Lamotte then brought out another strong point. Referring to the troops, he said the writer of the bordereau used the term "new plan."

"Now." he said, "It has been impressed upon you that on October 15 a circular was sent out from the War Ministry containing those very words, and that, therefore, the writer of the bordereau must have been an officer of the ministry. But one thing has struck me—who sent that circular? It was the third bureau, the chief of which was Lieut.-Col. Paty du Clam, who had the bordereau in his hands, for the previous two days."

M. de Fond Lamotte, by this intended to show that Paty du Clam purposely used the words "new plan" in the circular order, which the witness described as "arguing in a vicious circle to back up his gontention that an officer of the ministry wrote the bordereau, and that officer was Dreyfus."

Gen. Roget then rose to reply to M. de Fond Lamotte, but found he had

Gen. Roget then rose to reply to M. de Fond Lamotte, but found he had caught a tartar. He did not succeed in shaking the witness's testimony. while M. de Fond Lamotte took the unprecedented course of actually questioning Gen. Roget, and getting the better of him once or twice. The two men stood exchanging heated arguments, totally ignoring Col. Jouaust, who was twice obliged to ask them not to speak at each other, and to remain calm. Gen. Roget's reply was excited, particularly when he found he was making no impression on his opponent, who, on the contrary, scored off him. Roget was unused to this treatment, as hitherto he has had his own way, and been allowed to bully witnesses.

This answer brought a chorus of "Oh," from the audience, because had Dreyfus asked, traces would easily have been forthcoming.

Roget then said that Dreyfus might have asked verbally, in which case no trace of his application could be found.

asked whether any such request was made."

This practically ended the session, which was one of the most interesting and undeniably the most favorable to Dreyfus yet held. The military witnesses followed the evidence with all eyes and ears, exchanging confidences, which, judging from the expressions on their faces, were evidently far from agreeable.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

RENNES, Sept. 2.—[By Atlantic Caple.]. There was a large attended. RENNES, Sept. 2.—[By Atlantic Cable.] There was a large attendance and many generals were present at the Lycée this morning at the opening of the last session of the fourth week of the second trial of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, charged with treason. The interest centered in the testimony of Maj. Hartmann, of the artiflers when here done great services. The interest centered in the testimony of Maj. Hartmann, of the artillery, who has done great service for the defense. He resumed his deposition regarding artillery matters, bringing out points in the phrase-closy of the bordereau, indicating that the writer could not be Dreyfus. The witness wished to enter into the question of the Robin shell; but on Gen. In the president of the court. Col. Jouaust, decided to hear this part of the witness's testimony in camera at the end of today's, session.

In response to questions from Maitre Labori and M. Demange, counsel for the defense, Maj. Hartmann said any officer attending the Chalons camp could have obtained sufficient information to write notes on the covering of troops and Madagascar matters.

M. Labori then recalled Gen. Mercier's attack on Capt. Freystaetter on the latter's declaration that the secret dossier communicated to the court of 1894, contained a document relating to a shell, for which Gen. Mercier's attack on Capt. Freystaetter on the latter's declaration that the secret dossier communicated to the court of 1894, contained a document relating to a shell, for which Gen. Mercier called the captain a llar. Maj. Hartmann affirmed that it was quite possible that particulars about a certain shell should have leaked out in 1894.

tain shell should have leaked out in 1894.

An interesting confrontation between Gen. de Loye and Maj. Hartmann folowed, the general declaring he did not believe the major was keeping strictly to the truth. Gen. de Loye then proceeded to point to what he said were inaccuracies in Maj. Hartmann's testimony He insisted that Dreyfus, in the course of conversations with an artillery officer, could have secured information on the subjects mentioned in the bordereau, to which the major retorted that if any artillery officer had been questioned by Dreyfus, he would already have come forward to say so, as a matter of strict duty.

Gen. de Loye, questioned by M. Lat fus never asked him for particulars tabout his shell except on a minor point. The general added that he came as a technical witness to show Dreyfus could be guilty, adding that it was not his business whether he believed him innocent or guilty.

M. Labori asked Gen. de Loye if he knew whether the documents which could have been betrayed by a traitor, especially by the writer of the borderau, were important, whereupon the general turned to counsel and excitedly cried:

"Don't ask me; don't ask me!"

These exclamations created a sensation which was doubled when Gen. de Loye added that there was sufficient in the bordereau to establish that the traitor knew the importance of the documents he was giving up. The witness added:

"When I read the bordercau, I was dismayed."

Dreyfus and Esterhazy, that the latter wrote it. The witness entered into an interesting analysis of the phraseology of the bordereau, pointing out that certain phrases in it were met with in Esterhazy's letters, but never in those of Dreyfus. He then traced the influence exercised on Esterhazy by his linguistic acquirements, noticeably traces of German construction.

The government commissary, Maj. Carriere, asked M. Havel if he had been present at the sessions of the court before he had testified. M. Havel said: "Yes," at which the major, with great severity, said: "You have been guilty of a grave breach of judiciary discipline."

To this M. Havel quietly remarked: "But I had not been summoned as a witness at the time I attended the sessions."

witness at the time I attended the sessions."

Maj. Carriere sat down, chekmated. The letters exchanged by Col. Picquart and Gen. Gonse at the time the colonel wanted a thorough investigation into the case, were then read, and M. Labori then pointed out to Gen. Gonse that these letters never alluded to the alleged confession of Dreyfus. Gen. Gonse replied that it was because he always advised Col. Picquart not to mix up the Esterhazy and Dreyfus cases. Dreyfus, he added, had been condemned, and his case could not be reopened, but they were bound to see if there was not another traitor.

The general made a bitter complaint at the fact that his letters had been communicated to M. Scheurer-Kestner, former vice-president of the Senate, who published them in a book, entitled former vice-president of the Senate, who published them in a book, entitled former vice-president of the Senate, who published them in a book, entitled "Gonse-Pilate."

Replying to M. Laborl. Gen. Gonse insisted that Dreyfus having been condemned, it was not his duty to go back to his case.

A scepe between Gen. Gonse and Col. Picquart followed. The latter being called, said he gave Gen. Gonse's letters to his lawyer when he realized that he was the object of abominable intrigues, and when he received in Tunis, a letter of threats from the late Lieut.-Col. Henry, sent with the assent of Gens. Gonse and De Boisdeffre.

Col. Picquart added that he was not responsible for the subsequent publication of the letters. In reply Gen. Gonse said he had not given his assent to Henry's letter and that Col. Picquart berceived machinations against him everywhere.

Picquart then declared that at the same time he took the bordereau to Gen. Gonse, he showed him the secret dossier. Therefore he claimed Gen. Gonse could easily have acquainted himself with the probability that Dreyfus was innocent.

M. Labori then took Gen. Gonse in the nand on the sublect of fanneries with plication for the reading of these papers.

The next witness, M. de Fond Lamotte, a former officer of the artillery, testified that in 1894, Col. Picquart lent him a firing manual, which he might have kept as long as he pleased.

"So," the witness added, "there was little secrecy at that time. Any omcer could have obtained one in August, 1894. Another point in favor of Dreyfus is that no probationer could have believed in 1894 that he would go to the maneuvers."

The clerk read a circular dated May 15, 1894, announcing that the provationers would not go to the maneuvers.

15. 1894, announcing that the provationers would not go to the maneuvers.

M. de Fond Lamotte declared that if the prosecution would follow up the pleces of evidence, they would be absolutely convinced that Dreyfus did not write the bordereau.

This witness proved one of the strongest witnesses for the defense, as he brought out many points in support of his contention that Dreyfus could not have written the bordereau. If, as at first asserted, the bordereau was dated May, the witness argued, Dreyfus could not have written "I am going to the maneuvers," because a circular was issued in May informing the probationers that they would not go to the maneuvers. While if the bordereau was dated in April, as now asserted, Dreyfus could not have spoken of the firing manual which was only printed at the end of May.

Not one of the generals today found a reply to the last argument, which looked like a clincher, Gen. de Boisdeffre alone declaring that, although it was true that the circular mentioned was sent to the probationers, they knew that they could nevertheless go to the maneuvers if they made special application.

Gens. Mercler and Roget went on the stage and confronted M. de Fond Lamotte and a heated discussion ensued. Gen. Roget asked when the witness had altered his convictions in favor of Dreyfus, and M. de Fond Lamotte replied:

"At the items I was before the Court of Cassation I expected proof of my nad altered his convictions in favor or Dreyfus, and M. de Fond Lamotte replied:

"At the time I was before the Court of Cassation I expected proof of my comrade's guilt, and I was thunderstruck when I found the date of the bordereau had been changed."

Gen. Roget was greatly excited during the foregoing scene, but M. de Fond Lamotte did not flinch. Le retorted to all the general's observations. The two men giared at each other and once Gen. Roget addressed M. de Fond Lamotte in such a bullying fashion that the audience hooted him.

The prisoner rose to reply to Gen. de Bofsdeffre's argument. He declared he had never asked for permission to go to the maneuvers and recalled that when Col. Paty du Clam fixed the date of the bordereau in August, he (Dreyfus) pointed out that he could not have written the phrase "I am going to the maneuvers."

Gen. Roget here interposed that requests to go to the maneuvers were usually made verbally, so it could not be proved whether Dreyfus had or had not asked to go. The general, however, admitted that no inquiry had ever been made on this important point.

The court then adjourned for the day.

PROCEEDINGS IN DETAIL.

Following are the proceedings in de-when the Dreyfus court-martial reassembled this morning Maj. Hartmann of the artillery, whose deposition was interrupted yesterday by an adjournment of the court, ascended the standard completed his testimony, referring to the examination of the paragraphs of the bordereau relating to modifications in artillery formations. He pointed ont that much depended upon whether the word "formations for the first bureau of the headquarters staff could have obtained the information prior to July 4, 1894, except through steps which would immediately have led to his detection. After July 4, 1894, when the decree was issued making effective the new modifications in the-artillery it was a matter of common knowledge. If the formations referred to were merely maneuvers, only an officer attending the maneuvers of the third brigade at Chalons camp could have obtained the information, and no officer of the headquarters staff could be suspected.

[Note—Dreyfus was not connected with the first bureau, and did not attend the Chalons maneuvers.

[Discussing the firing manuel. Maj. Hartmann showed that it was widely distributed in 1894, and could have been borrowed by an officer of any arm of the service attending the gunnery service attendi which was intended to destroy the value of the Petit Bleu.

The general insisted, however, that only suspected letters addressed to Col. Picquart were opened. Discussing the "Sperans as" letters, M. Labort said the last letters, M. Labort said the last letter, having been preserved and not be considered to be a forgery.

Col. Jouaust rebuked M. Labori for raising the discussion, and counsel the course of the say whatever he considered proper on matters which could bring light.

Counsel then questioned Gen. Conse of Heavy and the subject of the last Lieut. Copy the

Maj. Hartmann retorted that he was surprised that when an officer was accused of the most abominable crime of treason, it was not thought necessary to open an inquiry with the view of proving him guilty or innocent.

Gen. de Loye. Pardon me. I said there was no inquiry. But let us understand one another. I meant no inquiry on the part of the Artillery Department.

Replying to Col. Jouaust. Gen. de quiry on the part of the Artillery Department.

Replying to Col. Jouaust, Gen. de Loye said he had made an inquiry at Bourges relative to what Dreyfus might have divulged concerning the Robin shell, and Robin at that me declared that Dreyfus had not asked him for an explanation, except once when he asked how the spindles of spinning mills could be made to work faster.

Replying to M. Demange, Gen. de Loye said he regarded himself solely as a technical expert. and only had to demonstrate the possibility of the prisoner being guilty without saying whether he thought him innocent or guilty, there extend Car. de Loye 16 here.

whether in thought him inhocent with a spuilty.

M. Labori asked Gen. de Loye if he would undertake the responsibility of commenting on the terms of the bordereau. The general replied that it was not within his province, and that it was not for him to express an opinion on evidence or argument. He desired to remain on scientific ground. He merely declared that the impossibilities urged by Dreyfus did not exist.

At this state of the proceedings there was an animated discussion between Gen. de Loye and M. Labori, who closely questioned the director of artilliery.

M. Labori. Can Gen. de Loye say anything in regard to the importance of the documents, the traitors, particularly the writer of the bordereau, may have delivered?

Gen. de Loye, speaking with great emotion, and extending his arm toward counsel for the defense, said:

"Don't ask me; don't ask me! There is sufficient evidence in the bordereau that the traitor is a master hand—a seigneur. He knows the importance of documents he is delivering. Information has the value of official documents. It is like notes of the Bank of France. The information was accepted as pure gold. When I read the bordereau, I was shocked." [Prolonged excitement in court.]

M. Labori, How does Gen. de Loye explain the words in the bordereau, "some interesting information—information concerning the troops. Why it was of the greatest possible value.

Counsel asked Maj. Hartmann to give an opinion on this point, and the major pointed out that if the writer of the bordereau was a "master hand," a "seigneur." he was ignorant of artillery matters, for if he referred to the hydraulic brake of the 120 gun he was communicating matters long known, while he referred to the 120 gun he was communicating matters long known, while he referred to the 120 gun he was communicating matters in her an important inaccuracy. The probationers of the headquarters staff never attended these firing trials. I believe it is the officers holding permanent positions on the rank. He act, that he has risen from he

maj. Hartmann's arguments. He accounted for the use of the expxression, "hydraulic brake" in the bordereau by the fact that Germans used the expression to designate similar brakes. Therefore, he added, it was natural that the correspondent of the Germans should employ the term.

Gen. de Loye also said:

"I beg the court to allow me to say that in any army liable to find itself confronted by the enemy, there is need of cohesion. Consequently all the officers of France must march hand in hand, as brethren. I de not think it is good for it to be said that officers who have risen from the ranks should stop short at a certain point, and that invidual merit should not count, and that it is a bar which cannot be passed.

"No, that is not satisfactory any more than it is true. Capt. Valerio is an example. He has made himself, and a large number of others similarly able have filled the positions to which they have risen. Coming here as the representative of the Minister of War, I beg the court to allow me to say to one of our comrades who has risen from the ranks that these opinions are not ours. I think it was necessary to say so."

After a brief discussion between Gen. Mercier, Gen. de Loye and Maj. Hartmann on the German expression used to designate hydro-pneumatic brakes, the trio returned to their seats.

M. Louis Havel, a member of the Institute and a professor of the College of France, gave further—expert evidence. He said that an examination of the bordereau from a standpoint of grammar, terminology, vocabulary and syntax, enabled him to definitely declare that it was absolutely impossible for the bordereau from a standpoint of grammar, terminology, vocabulary and syntax, enabled him to definitely declare that it was absolutely impossible for the bordereau from a standpoint of grammar, terminology, vocabulary and syntax, enabled him to definitely declare that it was absolutely impossible for the bordereau from the examination of the bordereau from a standpoint of grammar, terminology, vocabulary and syntax, enab

M. Havel. I was only cited in the last few days.

Col. Jouanst. Very well, that will do.

A brief suspension followed, and after the resumption of the session, it was notised that M. Caviagnac, former Minister of War, was in court, sitting beside Gen. de Boisdeffre.

The letters exchanged between Gen Gonse and Col. Picquart relative to Esterhazy, were read, as already published. Gonse, in these communications, urged caution, while Picquart replied that unless he acted quickly they would be overwhelmed.

M. Labori pointed out that during Picquart's investigations while urging caution. Gen. Gonse never mentioned the alleged confession of Dreyfus.

Gen. Gonse tried to explain this by saying he advised Picquart to sep-let us trouble about handwritings at present."

M. Laborf. How could the Dreyfus and Esterhazy cases be separated, when both were based on a common document?

Gonse. Because at that time Dreyfus had been convicted and the bordereau was ascribed to him.

M. Labori. Was it not possible to reconsider an error?

Gonse. There was nothing to prove to me that the bordereau was written by Esterhazy.

M. Labori. Will Gen. Gonse repeat what Col. Picquart told him concerning the conclusions of M. Bertillon?

Gen. Gonse, I was not acquainted cerning the conclusions of M. Bertillon?

Gen. Gonse, I was not acquainted with M. Bertillon's conclusions, but Picquart seems to exaggerate them. At M. Laborl's request, Col. Picquart was recalled, and said:

"In a brief letter which I wrote Gen. Gonse, in regard to M. Bertillon's conclusions, I only referred to part of his observations and the best proof that I did not wish to exaggerate them is the fact that I asked that Gen. Gonse ordered supplemntary Inquiry.

ate them is the fact that I asked that Gen. Gonse ordered supplemntary inquiry.

Col. Jouaust. In what form did M. Bertillon communicate the result of his examination?

Col. Picquart. Verbally, on two occasions. As regards Gen. Gonse's letters, I handed them to a lawyer, when I understood that I was the object of abominable intrigues, and when I received from my former subordinate, Henry, while in Tunis, a threatening letter which had been forwarded with the assent of Gens. Gonse and De Boisdefire. If this letter was published, I cannot be held responsible for it.

Gen. Gonse maintained that the Henry letter was written without his assent, and in reply to an insolent letter from Picquart. The latter, Gonse said, saw machinations everywhere. He alleged that he was sent to Tunis to be killed. The court could from its own conclusions.

Col. Picquart remarked that he brought the secret dossier to Gen. Gonse simultaneously with the bordereau, and that the general consequently was in a position to judge of the probabilities of the innocence of Dreyfus.

M. Labori asked if Gen. Gonse knew

M. Labori asked if Gen. Gonse knew of the plot hatched against Picquart, and if he knew that letters addressed to Picquart at Tunis were opened at the War Office, and the general admitted that a letter was opened in the intelligence department in November. He added that suspicious letters were also handed to him by Lieut-Col. Henry, so that he, the witness, might report to the Minister of War on them. them.

M. Labori. To whom was the letter addressed?

addressed?

Gen. Gonse. I do not know. No doubt to the chief of some department.

Picquart. It was addressed to me letters were only opened when they looked suspicious.

Col. Picquart retorted that it was curious his opened letters afterward reached him without a sign of having been tampered with. Counsel then questioned Gen. Gonse relative to the opening of the "Speranze" letter, and the general replied that this letter was not addressed to Picquart, but bore a curious address.

M. Labori. Why did Gen. Pellieux ascribe the letter to Picquart, whom he had never seen?

Gen. Gonse. I do not know.

M. Labori. Why did Gen. Pellieux ascribe the letter to Picquart, whom he had never seen?
Gen. Gonse. I do not know.
M. Labori pointed out that the first letter, which was genuine, was forwarded to Col. Picquart after having been opened, while the "Speranza" letter was retained. The latter could therefore be regarded as the work of a forger. [Great excitement.]
Col. Jouaust. You are entering into a discussion.
M. Labori. No, by virtue of article 319 of the code, I merely say what I think in regard to the evidence.
Gen. Gonse, replying further, dwelt upon the fact that it was necessary that the intelligence department should know the actions of Picquart. Who had been removed on account of his conduct.
M. Labori. Does Gen. Gonse think the Henry forgery was the result of a plot against Col. Picquart?
Gen. Gonse said he thought the forgery was "an unfortunate proceeding." [Laughter.] He would have prevented it if he had been consulted. But he did not believe there was a plot against Picquart. Henry desired to have fresh proof against Dreyfus, though "fresh proof was not really required, as the diplomatic dossier contained ample proof."
M. Labori protested against such a statement, and asked which document of the dossier implicated Dreyfus. Col. Jouaust refused to Preyfus, Col. Jouaust refused to allow the question, and counsel thereupon remarked that he reserved the right to form what conclusions he thought proper on this point.
Col. Jouaust Form as many conclusions as you like.
M. Labori next referred to the attempt to bribe Commissary Temps and erasures in the petit bleu. Gen. Gonse declared the petit bleu. Gen. Roget reappeared upon the scene, and amidst the keenest attention of all, described the forgery proceedings against Picquart as resulting from his (the winess's) discovery that erasures had been made in the Petit Bleu. "It was Gen. Zurlinden." Gen. Roget added, "who ordered Picquart to be prosecuted. I assume responsibility for all my own acts, but for my own acts only. I assume responsibility for all my o defense should arraign me on this point."

M. Labori declared he merely wished to show that the erasures could not be ascribed to Picquart, and that, therefore, these ought not to have formed the basis of the prosecution against him. Counsel then again asked that the expert evidence on the subject be read.

Col. Jouaust promised it should be read on Monday.

Upon three occasions, M. Demange asked Gen. Gones to explain why Picquart, on seeing the Petit Bleu, proposed to lay a trap for Esterhazy unless the Petit Bleu was addressed to Esterhazy. But counsel elicited no reply until Gen. Roget came to the resoue, and said Plequart knew Esterhazy was coming to Paris in any case, and if he sent a decoy letter Esterhazy would have appeared to come in response to it whether he had done so in reality or not.

The job of antedating the bordereau the witness added, was to make it prior date to that of the circular. I had since been attempted to attain the same object by post dating the circular.

prior date to that of the circular. It had since been attempted to attain the same object by post dating the circular.

"In 1894," the witness continued," firing manuals were given to whoever asked for them."

M. Demange. Can the witness, who was on the headquarters staff with Dreyfus, say whether, in 1894, he thought he would go to the maneuvers. [Excitement.]

M. Lamotte. I am performing a conscientious act. I am convinced that not one probationer in 1894 could have believed he would go to the maneuvers. As to the post-dating of the circular, witness said he did not doubt that different Ministers of War who had expressed opinions on the case were perfectly honest, but he thought they had made a mistake. [Sensation.]

Witness also pointed out that for Dreyfus to have been able to write the bordereau, it would have been necessary for him to have the firing manual in his possessien before the maneuvers, which was impossible. The charge, therefore, collapsed.

That Dreyfus did not write the bordereau, the witness was absolutely certain. [Murmurs of approval and disapproval.]

Replying to the judge the witness reiterated that it was impossible for Dreyfus to have believed after May, 1894, that he would attend the maneuvers.

As M. Lamotte was about to leave the witness box, Gen. de Bolsdeffre ascended the platform and said he wished to say a few words in reply to M. Lamotte. Simultaneously. Gens. Mercler, Roget and De Loye all asked for a similar privilege. The generals successively admitted the correctness of M. Lamotte. Simultaneously. Gens. M. Lamotte admitted that possibly he had done so, before the publication of the proceedings before the time of the prisoner's arrest, for that was kept secret.

Asked the usual question, the prisoner reminded the court that in 1894, when Col. Paty du Clam had endeavored to make the date of the bordereau August, he had protested that he could not have written the sentence, "I am going to the maneuvers," since he would not be going on regimental duty until October, November and Desember, and dwelt upon the fact that at the time he subject.

Dreytus, in conclusion, maintained that he had never asked leave to go to the maneuvers.

M. Demange corroborated the prisoner's testimony, and pointed out that the note mentioned by the prisoner had been added to the dossier by the Court of Cossation, while Dreyfus was still on Devil's Island, thus precluding all doubt as to its genuineness.

Gen. Roget attempted to show that Dreyfus might have asked leave to go to the maneuvers in 1894, but again M. Lamotte checkmated him by demonstrating that he did not do so.

M. Demange created a stir by saying that it was most regrettable that no inquiry had been made by the War Office on a point of such importance. The court briefly retired, and afterward announced that it had been decided to hear the remainder of Maj. Hartmann's evidence in camera on Monday.

CAPE NOME DISTRICT.

Senttle Man Says it Will Be the Rich est Camp on Earth.
[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]

SEATTLE (Wash.,) Sept. 2.—W. B. Dean, a well-known resident of this Dean, a well-allow city, who has just returned from Cape Nome, claims that the district will Nome, claims that the district become the richest mining cam the richest mining camp on

He said: "Cape Nome beach has been prospected and demonstrated to contain pay dirt for a distance of thirty-five miles. There are 600 men beach mining, and I think it is a conservative estimate to say that they are washing out an average of $25 per day to the man. The principal portion of the work is being done betwen the mouth of Snake and Penny rivers, a stretch of beach ten miles in extent. The number of beach diggers is increased in Cape Nome from the fact that the men find they can do better by mining on the beach on their own account. "It is not necessary to boom Cape Nome. Facts will make the camp. My properties are not for sale, and I am not interested in any transportation companies. By the time the season closes this fall, the two or three creeks being developed, together with the beach diggings, will have, in my spinion, produced about $1,00,000.

EXPLORING COOK'S INLET.

Glenn Military Expedition.

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]

SEATTLE, Sept. 2.—Some details of the progress made by the Glenn military exploring party in the Cook's Inlet and Sushitna River country, Alaska, have been brough here by Quartermaster's Clerk P. H. Kuhn. Unexpected success was achieved by the expedition, he reports, as far as its general purposes went. The Sushitna has been demonstrated to be navigable for eral purposes went. The Sushitna has been demonstrated to be navigable for a distance of over 150 miles from its mouth, with a minimum depth of water of three feet. Two of its branches were ascended, but found to be navigable for ordinary river boats of comparatively light draft. In a general way the exploration of the interior of the country is progressing favorably.

No bad luck of serious consequences attended the expedition. Before exploring the Yonook, the last of the four parties detailed by Capt. Glenn had gotten safely over the divide. One party was led by Lieut. J. A. Herron, with nine men and Indian guides, bound for the mouth of the Tanneu. The object of this expedition, like the others, was to discover trails leading to the interior. Lieut. Herron's Indian guides deserted him when he crossed the divide, but he will be able to reach his objective point.

Another party of eight men, in command of J. L. Van Schoonover, is well on the way to Circle City, and should get through in good season. Still another party, in charge of Topographer C. E. Griffith, is working over the divide to Eagle City, and mapping out a new trail for prospectors.

Finally, an expedition was prepared which was instructed to discover a practical route for a trail from Knik Arm, on Cook's Inlet, to Portage Bay, on Prince William Sound. This party has a great deal of work in sight, the country being rough in the extreme, and filled with glaciers.

There are plenty of destitute miners still in the Copper River country, and some even in the Cook's Inlet district.

United States of the members of the judiciary is favored by a large majority.

There is but liftle opposition to the retention in office of the present judiciary. The consensus of opinion as regards the officers of the proposed Territory to be appointed by the President, is that they should be selected from the residents of the islands. There is a division of opinion as to whether the other officers for the Territory should be appointed by the Governor or elected by the people. A large majority emphatically declares in favor of the repeal of the penal contract labor laws.

Numerous suggestions are offered regarding the solution of the vexatious labor problem. The granting of ...e franchise to all native-born and naturalized citizens of the Territory is favored by most of the Hawaiians. Some think the franchise should be restricted by educational or property qualifications.

DECISIVE VICTORY.

COLUMBIA BEATS DEFENDER IN A TRIAL RACE.

New Cup-defender Goes Over the in Much Less Time Than the Old One.

New Steel Mast Expected to Aid 1 Defeating the Shamrock-Owners of the Yacht Satisfied-Sails Will Be Altered.

Closing Day at Nutwood Park a Suctant Events at Sheepshead. Baseball Scores.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] NEWPORT (R. I.) Sept. 2.—The first of the formal trial races between the Columbia and Defender today, for the purpose of selecting a yacht to sail against Shamrock in defense of sail against Shamrock in defense of the America's cup, resulted in so de-cisive a victory for the new boat that were it not for the fact that it is de-sirable to have her race as much as possible, other contests would seem almost useless. The yachts sailed one of the regulation iffteen-mile windward and leeward course in an eight-knot breeze that increase on the beat and flattened out at the finish, and it took the Columbia just 6 minutes and took the Columbia just 6 minutes and fattened out at the finish, and it took the Columbia just 6 minutes and 49 seconds less time to cover the distance than it did the defender.

Nearly every one seemed fully satisfied with the result of the race, especially the owners of the new boat, for the steel mast, which was carried through the race for the first time, certainly improved her wonderfully, enabling her to stand straighter than the Defender, and, therefore, to outpoint her. In fact, the Columbia sailed all around the old boat, and but for the softening of the wind as she neared the line and the subsequent freshening as her rival came up to the finish, the difference between the two boats would have been at least two, if not three minutes greater. It was a stiff brush while it lasted, and the result was certainly no discredit to those on the Defender.

Those who watched her saw the Columbia stand up to the breeze as never before besides footing faster and pointing higher. For a few moments the baby jib topsail, was taken off to see how she would hold the old boat, but while it made little difference, it was replaced, only to be removed again when the wind increased to nearly twelve knots. Undoubtedly there will be a few changes in some of the new sails for, as compared with the Defender's, which are now well nigh perfect, they seem drawn and puckered in many places.

Nearly all eyes were turned, at least part of the time, on the steel mast that proved so treacherous when first it was tried. Today it stood up straighter than any pine mast could have done, with not the slightest sign of a buckle, leaving little doubt that this mast or a similar affair will go through the cup races successfully, and aid-her materially in defeating the Shamrock.

NUTWOOD PARK MEETING.

Last Day Produces the Best Sport of the Week.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

DUBUQUE (Iowa,) Sept. 2. - The last day of the big Nutwood Park meeting was a success from a racing point of view, some of the best sport of the week being furnished in the three events on the card. The at-tendance was about one thousand. The weather was fine, and the track good condition.

As I had advertised Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for some time, I determined to try it; so two weeks ago when I had a severe attack I got a 25-cent bottle of it and took it according to directions. The pain left me and I have had no trouble since. This is the first remedy which has done me any good and I have tried dozens before. One of my friends tried the remedy since, and half of a 25-cent bottle cured him."—[Adv.

Mexican Navigators Sleep at the Helm and Let Their Frail Craft Drift With the Tide.

Vessel Stuck in the Mud at the River's Mouth-Night Attack by Mosquitees-Arrival at [STAFF CORRESPONDENT OF THE TIMES.] POTAM (Mex.,) Aug. 21.—After a futile effort to reach the Yaqui River by the overland route, an unexpected opportunity to go by sea was offered, and at 9 p.m., August 16, I left Guay-mas on the pilot-boat Loretano. The run from port to the mouth of the river was said to be made in from three to five hours. The breeze was light and the sea smooth, and the Loretano made slow progress. The slight motion of the boat and the mild wind were of the boat and the mild wind were conductive to sleep, and before midnight I stretched out upon a tarpaulin on deck and fell asleep. It was the first night I had passed comfortably in Mexico, and up to date, the last.

At about 2 a.m. I awoke and found the boat hove to and the entire crew and a sleep with pabody at the below and the sleep.

sound asleep, with nobody at the helm. We were barely out of the gulf. About daylight the crew awoke and got the boat under way again, and a long beat down the coast began. At 1 p.m. we arrived at the bar. We knew we had arrived because the boat bumped on the bottom several times. The Loretano managed to lurch and plow her way over the bar, and made an attempt to enter the river, but wind and way over the bar, and made an attempt to enter the river, but wind and current were adverse, and she swung against the bank and stuck. The crew stripped and jumped overboard and pushed against the bow. The Loretano swung into the current and started wildly for the bar. She refused to obey the helm and after a few moments of erratic drifting she struck a mud flat and stuck fast. Overboard went the entire crew again, and for a quarter of an hour I neither saw nor heard anything of them. I began to wonder if they had gone daft and drowned themselves, and to speculate on my ability to navigate the craft back to Guaymas should the tide lift her out of the mud. The wide marshes of the Yaqui deita were very dreary and inhospitable, and the turbulent bar did not seem easy to cross. Sea fowl flapped lazily over the marshes, uttering raucous cries, and their presence only emphasized the loneliness of the scene.

The crew were so long silent and invisible, that I had serious fears that ence only emphasized the loneliness of the scene.

The crew were so long silent and invisible, that I had serious fears that they had been knocked in the head by the boat, or had stuck head first in the mud when they dived overboard, but when I leaned over the bow far enough, I saw all three in water waint deep, with their heads against the boat, straining silently to shove her into deeper water. Their efforts were futile, and they accepted the suggestion that an anchor be taken to windward and the boat warped up to the channel.

ation that an anchor be taken to windward and the boat warped up to the channel.

While we were all tugging on the warp line, the pilot boat Carolina came in over the bar, and started for the mouth of the river in fine style. I watched her enviously and thought things of the Loretano's crew disparaging to their seamanship, but the next moment the Carolina was against the bank, and stuck eyen as the Loretano had been. The Carolina got out a towline and two saliors, naked, took it to the bank and hauled like canal mules, while the captain poled with an oar. Progress was slow, but still it was progress. Towing, poling, sticking in the mud ond sometimes losing in five seconds the advantage gained by a quarter of an hour's haid work, the two sloops went slowly up the river. Four hours of this work exhausted the crews, and at 6:30 p.m. both boats hauled to the bank, took in sall and made all snug for the night, having made less than a mile from the mouth of the river.

The river was about one hundred wards wide at this point. Where the boats tied up to the bank the marsh was almost bare for a considerable it, and Capt. Luls stood the first watch with the Winchester across his knees, while the rest of us battled with mosquitoes.

The river was about one hundred wards wide at this point. Where the boats tied up to the bank the marsh was almost bare for a considerable stretch, affording no cover to the approach of an enemy. The opposite bank was fringed with reeds, and back of them was a thick iungle of mesquite. The captain of the Loretano said it was advisable to "mucho cuidado" for bad Indians, and cleared the decke for oction. The armament of the Loretano consisted of one old Remination carbine, one Winchester consigned to somebody in Medano as freight, and my 44 Colt. As my cartridges fitted the Winchester, we siripped off its wrappings and loaded it, and Capt. Luis stood the first watch with the Winchester across his knees, while the rest of us battled with mosquitoes.

The mosquitoes were worse than Yaquis. They came in platoons and regiments, and they crawled in whereever air could go. Anointing with a mosquito and fea dope composed of turpentine and pennyroyal was waste of effort. The fiends flew into the bottle, got drunk on the turpentine and sallied forth more vicious and bloodthirsty than before. Even carbolic saive liberally applied did not discourage them. A metallic coffin hermetically sealed might be a protection against the mosquitoes of the Yaqui River. A mackintosh tied around my head failed to keep them out, for I had to stick my nose out for air, and that nose was an absurdity before morning. Nevertheless sleep came, and I believe that during the latter part of the night nobody was on guard against Yaquis, although all knew that sloops had been attacked several times in the river.

In the morning the wind was still unfavorable, and we put up an awning, got breakfast and prepared to wait for a breeze or return to the steamer Jalisco. The mosquitoes took a day off, and only the hot sun promoted discomfort. Prospects of malaria from the swamp seemed excellent. At 10.45 the wind hauled to the south, and we got under way and made about two miles under sail, keeping as far as possible from the south bank, which was supposed to be infested by Yaquis. A bend in the river brought the wind dead ahead, and towing was resumed, but the north shore was so unfavorable for the work that little progress was made, and the Loretano hung in the swift current hopelessly until the crew finally consented to take chances on an ambush and crossed to the other bank. Another bend gave us a fair wind, and we sailed into Medano at 2 p.m. forty-one hours out from Guaymas.

Medano is a straggling collection of adobe houses and cane hovels, inhabited by Mexicans and Yaquis. The Indians gathered on the bank professed friendliness, but their looks and behavior indicated in barracks, fortified with a ditch and breastworks. At the beginning of the outbreak, Yaquis fired on a sloop from the above opposite Medano, and drove the occupants overboard. Aureliano The Area a passenger, was droven the wife and children or the captain, who is also a Yaqui and brother of a chief of the hostiles. They outraged the woman and then released her.

At the berracks in Medano I found a Mexican officer who was about to leave for Potam with an escort, and he sold I could go with him. He seemed horse and saddle, for the use of which I was to pay H at Potam. It was impossible to gets anything to eat in Medano until "mañana," and a search for a glass of milk resulted likewise. A bottle of warm beer supplied by a Chinese had to suffice for nourishment. At 5 o'clock we started for Potam with an escort, and the soldiers stripped from the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast down and waded through it sinking half-leg deep in mud most of the wast of the most of the mo

But I did not remain at the Cuartel. My guide took me to the bacienda and left me with young Senor Torres. Senor Torres was very hospitable and courteous, and it might interest him to know that the officer who introduced me collected a dollar for the hospitality of the hacienda.

The hacienda of Guamochii is a rambling collection of adobe buildings surrounded by earthworks and stockade. The presence of perhaps a hundred soldiers gave the place the appearance of a military post. Sentries were posted on their arms. Nobody moved about without a rifle in hand.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WILKESBARRE (Pa.,) Sept. 2.— John Pollock was shot and killed; Wil-liam Thayer was seriously wounded and about eight men were hurt in a fight between the strikers at the co liery in West Pittston and a repair gang. The strikers have been in an ugly mood for several days, and yes-terday stoned several men. Warrants were issued for their arrest, but none was served.

were issued for their arrest, but none was served.

Last night a lot of top rock Iell into the mine and today Night Watchman Thayer got five men together to make repairs. As they reached the mine strikers blocked their way and threw stones. The workmen ran to the 'head house' for shelter, whereupon the strikers opened fire on them. Thayer fell badly wounded. The others returned the fire, killing John Pollock, one of the strikers. The strikers then scattered in the woods, and are hiding from arrest.

About five hundred men are involved in the strike huich has been in operation for nearly six weeks. They are striking against what they claim to be excessive dockage.

A large number of deouty constables are guarding the mine. The strikers are worked up to a high pitch of excitement and threaten vengeance. All of them are armed, and it would not take much provocation to start a general riot.

been sold to N. Treweek and associates, through the agency of E. C. Johnson of the Mining Exchange at Hill City, S. D. The property comprises 130 acres with mill site, water right, timber, etc., and is located eight miles southwest of Custer in Nugget Gulch. This is the richest free-gold strike ever made in the Black Hills. The ore averages $1360 gold per ton of ore, after the "specimens" have been picked out.

Charles Carr, aged 22, was attracted late one afternoon by a peculiar redlooking "blow-out," fifty feet above him on the side of the gulch, and got off his horse to go to it. He broke a piece of rock and saw what looked like a kernel of yellow corn bedded in the quartz. He concluded it was gold, and called to his brother to come. They

At last evening's meeting of the trustees of the Los Angeles State Normal School, Dr. George F. James was elected-head of the department of psychology and pedagogy and director of the model and practice school of the State Normal School.

Five years ago Dr. F. B. Dresslar was elected to this place. His work and his prominence as an educator led the regents of the University of California to offer him a position in the pedagory department of that institution. Two years ago Dr. C. C, Van Liew was elected to fill the place. He has become so well known in this State that a nong twenty-eight applicants he was successful in being electel president of the State Normal School at Chico.

A desire to worthily fill the place left vacant by the two preceding men has led the board of trustees of the Normal School to consider carefully a number of applicants. Several men of broad training and wide experience have been willing to take charge of the work, but it was thought best among the number to select Dr. James. He was prepared for his work in the University of Michigan, and by four years of study in Europe, taking his doctor's degree at the University of Halle. He also gave much attention to the schools of Germany, France and Italy. He has held several positions of prominence: He has been assistant professor of pedagogy in the University Extension in Philadelphia, and secretary of the Educational Commission in Chicago. He is at present a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago. Dr. Harper, president of that institution, He is at present a member of the fac-ulty of the University of Chicago. Dr. Harper, president of that institution, writes of him:
"I cannot think of a man from whom you might be able to secure better results. I hope for your sake that you will secure him. I wish we could hold him here, but we already have as many men and women in that department as we can carry."

Dr. James is also recommended by many other prominent men. President

Dr. James is also recommended by many other prominent men. President Pierce has had this appointment under consideration for more than a month. The Normal School has now admitted 180 new students. Of these 100 are High School graduares and will take the two-year, or two-and-a-half-year course. The rest are admitted to the four-year course from the ninth year of the High School on teachers' certificates. All but thirteen of the 180 were admitted on credentials.

TUNNEL PAYMENTS ESTOPPED. The City Notified of a Dispute Between Contractors. Notice was served on the city au-thorities yesterday not to pay further allowances to Swensen & Hill, the conors for the construction of the Third-street tunnel, until the claim against this firm of Albert E. Chaffey, the sub-contractor, had been liquidated. The notice was in legal form, and before it was served ft was submitted to City Attorney Haas with the inquiry whether it would be followed by the city. The City Attorney stated that upon the filing of such a notice the city would pay nothing to the contractors. The notice was then presented to Acting Mayor Silver and to the City Au-ing Mayor Silver and to the City Auditor.

The reason for this action on the part of Chaffey is that he has not been paid for his work on the tunnel for some time. He holds a sub-contract for making the excavations, and owns an excavating machine with which, when it is in working order, he can do with two men work tha, twenty men can do without. Chaffey said last night that he had had no settlement with the contractors for some months, and as his work had been done in good faith he did not desire to wait for his reoney any longer. His men have been made to him by the contractors, so that he is more than $1300 out on the contract, although more than that amount is coming to him. The trouble between the parties has been taken into the courts, but there is no immediate prospect of a settlement there.

He severely burned on the legs about two months ago from blazing oil. He was sent to the California Hospital for treatment, and about one month ago the physicians decided that skin-grafting was the only hope for him, as his legs were burned so severely that the skin had entirely peeled off. After trying in vain to find persons who were willing to part with pieces of their skin, ten of the hospital nurses voluntered to contribute the necessary cuticle. The operation was successful and Coster is now off the road to recovery.

"I had been a sufferer for fifteen years nearly all the time." says Mrs. Sarah E. Taylor, of Eureka, Greenwood Co., Kans., in a friendlyletter to Dr. Pierce. "In August, 1896, was taken with severe cramping pain in my stomach. The doctor here said it was due to gall-stones. He relieved me for a short time, and then there was a hard lamp about the size of a goose egg formed in my right side. It became so sore I could carreely walk about the house, and I had no appetite. I consulted the best doctors in town and they said medicine would do me no good. I gave up all hope of ever getting well again. ing. Henderson was bound over to the Superior Court in bail lixed at $1000. He admits his guilt.

Henderson's own statement on the stand was to the effect that he was a laboring man about 29 years of age, who for several months past has been working with thrashing crews in the grain districts hereabouts. He came to the city from Ventura county, where he had a lot of "truck" which ne needed in his work here. It was this that caused him, he testified to take Graham's horse and buggy, hitched in front of a church at the corner of Hope and Eleventh streets, one Sunday evening in 17th, He then drove around to get his brottler, W. A. Henderson, and they started north. That he had stolen the rig, he did not tell his brother until they were far out of the county. The brother then remonstrated with him, and after he could not persuade him to turn from his evil way and take back the outfit, he left him to go his way to Ventura county alone. Although R. L. said that his brother, W. A., was with him and was charved with the offense along with himself, yet he was innocent. The brother was not arrested.

As R. L. was making his way alone, he accidentally broke the buggy and then turned the horse loose. This took place near Lompoc. Not long after that, he was arrested. When asked if he had attempted to shoot the horse, he denied it. Henderson concluded his statement by saving that he had never thought of stealing a rig, but had simply borrowed it with the intention of returning everything immediately upon his return.

SLUMP IN PEACHES.

Andrew McNally Gets the Biggest Crop of Prunes and Lucky Bald win the Best Money-Price of Dried Peaches Down to Four Cents-New Winery Going Up.

PASADENA, Sept. 2.—[Regular Correspondence.] The slump in the peach market has startled some of the local producers. Two weeks ago shippers were paying 6 cents a pound for dried peaches here. This was the highest notch reached by the market, although apricots had brought 10 cents. The price gradually went down a quarter of a cent at a time till yesterday peaches were bringing 5 cents. Today they suddenly were marked down to 4, and the surprise gave the dryers "that tired feeling." Four cents was day they suddenly were marked down to 4, and the surprise gave the dryers "that tired feeling." Four cents was the top price that any of the shippers would offer this afternoon. An advance is expected later on.

The total output of dried apricots from Pasadena was 250 tons this year. The peach total will be much smaller. There is an enormous yield of prunes, five times what it was last year. W. F. Hoover of the North Ontario Company, who has pocketed the most of the large orchards hereabouts, says, "we shall get four or five hundred tons this season, as against fifty tons last fall." The biggest pune crop harvested in this vicinity, came from Andrew McNally's sixty-acre piece in Altadena. It weighs 160 tons, and has been sold for $10 a ton. The prunes are very small, on account of the inability of the owner to get water enough for them. With a good supply of water, the value of Mr. McNally's crop would have been almost doubled. Lucky Baldwin has vindicated his title in the prune business this year. All agree that the crop on his Santa Anita ranch is the best in the valley. He has about 100 tons of large and clegant prunes, which have been sold for $18 a ton. The prune basis is two and a half cents for dried for 70s to 80s, at present.

GARIBALDI'S LATEST.

GARIBALDI'S LATEST.

Garibaidi is the proprietor of the roadhouse and beer garden just outside of the city limits in Lamanda Park. It is against his saloon chiefly, that the crusade for the organization of a no-saloon "sanitary district" has been started in Lamanda. Garibaldi evidently sees the handwriting on the wall, and has planned to protect himself. He has begun the erection of a brick winery, 64 by 26 feet in size, on a lot in the rear of his saloon. He says he has no doubt that the sanitary district will be established at the election October 10, but he proposes to run a winery when his saloon may be closed, and the law can't stop him from selling wines and liquors of his own manufacture. "I may be happy yet, you bet." is Garibadi's motto.

"PASADENA DAY."

The young people of Pasadena Camp, Sons of Veterans and their auxiliary, the Ladles' Aid, are working hard to make "Pasadena day" at the Long Beach encampment of the Southern California Veterans' Association, a festal occasion of the brightest hue. Headquarters will be established on the grounds by both organizations, who will entertain their friends most hospitably. W. S. Lacey will have charge of the tents of the "sons," while Miss May Barnhart will preside over the house of the Ladles' Aid. Pasadena day falls on Thursday next. The Americus Club Band has been engaged for the afternoon, and will leave this city on the Terminal at 1 o'clock, accompanied by large numbers of the G.A.R., W.R.C. and junior organizations who are this time at the right of the line. First Lieutenant J. A. Stafford, who is in temporary command of the Sons, has been rushed with business all the week. With other members of the committees he has arranged a vaall the week. With other members of the committees he has arranged a va-ried programme, which will include a flag drill, a short farce under the di-rection of Miss Agnes Foote, music, a brief talk by Rev. Robert J. Burdette, himself a veteran; a big parade and a band concert. The Sons of Veterans had a special meeting this evening, to perfect arrangements.

Sale of Property.

SAN PEDRO, Sept. 2.—Regular Correspondence.] The Southern Pacific Railroad Company is about ot bring suit against the city to annul the sale of the company's wharf along the waterfront. The wharf was assessed by the City Assessed. the City Assessor a year are as usual. When it came time to pay city taxes the company contended that the wharf was a part of its right-of-way assessed by the State Baord of Equalization and, therefore, exempt from separate assessment. The usual procedure for unpaid taxes was carried out by the city officers, and the wharf was sold to the city for the unpaid taxes. A representative of the company said a few days ago that suit would be brought to have the sale declared void. The wharf along most of its length lies about one hundred feet from the company's main track, and there is a stretch of shoal water and tide land between them.

This year's total equalized city assessment closely approximates $670,000, which sum is about $19,000 more than the total equalized assessment for last year. The Banning steamers were last year assessed at $19,000. This year the Bannings claim Wilmington as the home port of their steamers, and those boats are not on the San Pedro city assessment roll. Making allowance for that fact the assessment on San Pedro property this year is about $38,900 in excess of last year's figures. was a part of its right-of-way as-sessed by the State Baord of Equali-

LONG BEACH. Question of Building Sewer System.

Items of Expense. LONG BEACH, Sept. 2.—[Regular Correspondence.] The question of a city sewer system is to be taken up again as soon as the summer rush is over, which will probably be after the veterans return to their homes from their ten days' encompment hers. The press of summer business has so fully occupied attention that there has been little said of the sewer matter for several months. The City Trustees last winter had a preliminary survey made and plans drawn for a trunk sewer. The trunk sewer plans were drawn with a view to the accommodation or street lateral sewers draining into them. Beyond that there has little or nothing been said or done relative to the street laterals or the house con-nections to be laid to them. As in numerous other cities the greatest need of sewer accommodations is in the with a view to the accommodation of nections to be laid to them. As in numerous other cities the greatest need of sewer accommodations is in the thickly settled part of the business district, but there are other portions of town where the demand for better disposition of sewerage is urgent. A sewer system built under the plan pursued in Santa Monica would involve three or four items of expense to each piece of property drained by the system. One item would be the additional city taxes to make annual payments on bonds for the trunk sewer. Another item would be the property's proportionate share of the expense of a street lateral to drain into the trunk sewer. A third item would be the expense of laying a pipe connecting the street lateral with the house plumbing. The fourth item would be the house plumbing, that is if it has not already been procured for use in connection with a cesspool. The first step to be taken by the City Trustees will probably be in the way of preliminaries to the calling of a bond election.

The ground was thoroughly sprinkled today, the flagstaff on the parade ground was made ready for the Stars and Stripes, and other preparations for the gathering have been going ahead rapidly. Commander Hartzell is employing a device for staying the tents so at to avoid as far as possible the annoyance of tripping over the guy ropes. Present indications are considered favorable for a very large attendance at the encampment.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 2.—[Regular Correspondence.] What seems to have been a robbery combined with an attempt to commit murder has been discovered at Gaviota, about forty miles above here. Sheriff Stewart, or his way north on yesterday's stage, no-ticed a man, supposed to be drunk, lying under a tree. He mentioned this at Gaviota. The affair was talked of, and after the Sheriff's departure some one heard of the matter who had seen the man in the same place on Th day. On going to the spot a railroad hand was found in an unconscious condition, and with his head split open by a blow from a club. He had by a blow from a club. He had been there for over twenty-four hours. To-day it is feared he will die, and the local officers were notified this evening. The wounded man could not be identified. He had been drinking at Los Cruces saloon with other men. They left Thursday morning for Gaviota, and one of the other men was heard to remark, "He has $20, but I'll bet he never gets to Gaviota." Sheriff Stewart will agrive at Los Cruces late tonight.

SAILING OF THE ROVER.

The yacht Rover, owned by R. Barret Fithian of this city, sailed this morning for a six months' cruise in the South Sea Islands. She got away at 11 o'clock, struck a fair wind and was out of sight by 1 o'clock. Her first port will be in the Marquesas group of islands, these being distant about a twenty-seven days' sail. A number of local club men went out on the Rover. They will leave her at nightfall and return here on the Morning Star, which followed the yacht. A large party of society people crowded the Country Club pier to see the Rover sail. SAILING OF THE ROVER.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Sept. 2.—[Regular Correspondence.] The award for the erection of a chapel was made early in the week, and the contractors have already commenced operations. The architect is J. Lee Burton, and the contractors Mathis & Haupt. The dimensions of the building are to be 65x116 feet. In order to accommodate both religious denominations, the in-terior has been designed as a combination chapel; that is, with distinctive auditoriums for Protestant and Cath-olic services. To deaden the sound, a double wall of brick will separate the chapels. Between these walls will be an air space of four inches.

chapels. Between these walls will be an air space of four inches.

The interior of the Protestant chapel will be 44x65 feet, and 22 feet high. A gallery extending across the rear of the chapel will be capable of seating 125 persons, and the total seating capacity of this chapel will be 500. To the rear of the rostrum, at an elevation of five feet, will be a choir and organ loft, 8x20 feet.

The interior of the Catholic chapel will be 40x44 feet, and it is designed to seat 300 people. The designs for altar, chancel, sacristy, etc., show that nothing needed will be lacking in this chapel. Asked when it would be completed. Mr. Mathis replied: "You may depend upon its being ready for occupancy on Christmas day."

MARBLEHEAD IN PORT.

The city was somewhat surprised yesterday afternoon by the announcement that a strange warship had dropped anchor in the bay, having come in entirely unannounced, and without even taking a pilot, a credit to the harbor, as few of her officers had ever been in this port before. The stranger is the cruiser Marblehead which played such an important part in the work off Cuba during the late war with Spain. The Marblehead is bound for San Francisco, and will join the Pacific aquardon at Mare Island. The stop at San Diego was a part of the plan of Commodore Colby, and he also takes advantage of the opportunity to coal here, although the Marblehead has a sufficient supply to run to San Francisco. The cruise from the eastern seboard, beginning last March, has been a delightful and uneventful one, forquent stops being made at South and Central American ports. The last port visited was Acapulco. To Rupture Sufferers Of Santa Barbara.

My home is at 215 Santa Barbara Street. For five years, prior to the year 1895 I suffered with painful scrotal hernia and was unable to obtain relief until, in 1895. I went to Professor Fandrey, late of Europe. I had heard from several of our citizens, who had been cured by him, of his ability as a Rupture Specialist. After an examination he told me he could give me relief and comfort at once and effect a permanent cure if I would follow his instructions, which I did. After seven months was completely cured, and up to the present time I am still perfectly free from any sign of Rupture. Professor Fandrey left Santa Barbara in 1896 and located in Los Angeles, where he is having unprecedented success, and I notice the Los Angeles papers that since he has been there and had such unbounded success in the curing of hundreds from Rupture that there have been many companies, sprung up in that city like mushrooms, but not being able to show cures, have one after the other died out. One of these companies I see is advertising in one of our city papers, but I am quite sure that if any one is in need of assistance in the line of Rupture, he will not only take my advice, but that of a number of other Santa Barbara citizens who have reason because of their own cure to refer any fellow-sufferer to Prof. Fandrey, who is now at 642 S. Main St., Los Angeles, and whose method is simple and natural, without operation or injection, guaranteeing reiter, con-fort and protection before you leave his office. And I am sure that any one who follows his directions faithfully, as I did, will be cured as I and hundreds of others have

Mrs. Harris has recently opened a special department for facial and scalp treatment, at the Hotel Catalina, where she treats diseases of the face and scalp, scientifically. Freckies and pimples removed permanently. The worst cases of scalp diseases cured. Mrs. Harris is a pupil of Dr. Douglas Graham of Boston. Ladies are cordially invited to call and inspect her process. She makes a specialty of the most obstinate cases of freckies, pimples and other facial blemishes, and has effected some wonderful cures, which she has on exhibition. Shampooing, manicuring and face massage will be done in this department.

To catch the eye you must show somet fing that it will pay people to see. Desmand is doing it tremendously with his stock of fall and winter $2.50 hats. 50c neckwear, etc., etc. He's catching eyes and people who have eyed in crowds. It's funny, but those who are caught enjoy it hugely. It would be a hard matter to find a spot in or out of Los Angeles where money would fetch more than it does at Desmond's store in the Bryson block, No. 141 S. Spring street. Fall and winter "Dunlap" hats now on sale.

I have a new cure for deep wrinkles

I have a new cure for deep wrinkles I have a new cure for deep wrinkles and smallpox pittings. It makes absolutely no difference how old the person or how deep the wrinkles or pittings. I remove every trace of age and every blemish from the complexion. I remove superfluous hair, moles, warts, scars, birth marks and powder marks, cure eczezma, acne, pimples, freckles, moth patches, tan, red veins, and oily skin. I guarantee all my work. A Big Dry Goods Shipment.....

Damaged by Water.

An unfortunate occurrence, the steamer "Chalmette" of the Southern Pacific's Sunset Route, which sailed from New York on or about the 14th of August, with freight for Pacific Coast points, encountered some extremely rough weather and shipped a great deal of water, doing much damage to her cargo. We were billed on her manifest for One Bale Flannelette, 2 Bales Towels, 1 Case Ladies' and Children's Wear, I Case Drapery Goods and

Two Cases Ladies' Cloaks and Suits.

These goods were all more or less damaged by water, wet through, soiled, stained, and a little home ingenuity will make them all right, but we cannot give them any place in our store. It won't do to mix them with other goods, the railroad company has paid us for them, and instructed us to sell them out the best we could.

PRIZE WORD-PATCHER.

MISS ETTA B. CONNER WINS THE TIMES AD-STORY COMPETITION.

A Thousand Ingenious Folk Spend Hours at the New Pastime Which Has Paled the Glory of Pigs-in-the-Clover.

Quaint, Incongruous and Witty Tales Woven by Clever People from Shreds and Tatters of the Advertisements in Thursday's Times-Love Stories, Announcements of Wives for Sale, and Rhapsodies on Climate.

"Gulliver's Travels" tells of a coun-ry whose inhabitants wrote books by other typical skits: try whose inhabitants wrote books by haking up all the words in the dictionary in a big kaleidoscope, which onstantly rearranged them in neverrepeated patterns. Whenever was a gleam of sense, the mysterious phrases were written down. The re-sulting books were said to be very in-

That is what the 922 competitors for the "ad-story" prize offered by The Times have been doing. They found 'ad-storying" the most fascinating of pastimes, eclipsing the fifteen puzzle, pigs in the clover, liquid air, or the end of the century, in power to make one forget that such things as clocks

The rules of the new game are sim Bits of advertisements from arsday's Times were to be pasted together to tell a story, and the best "ad-story" was to receive a prize of $5. That was all there was to the rules, but the possibilities were boundless and most enticing.

Did you try your hand? Such nipping and sorting and pasting never was as ended at midnight Friday, when the first "ad-story" competition closed. The mails bulged with stories. There had been only thirty-six hours' notice, but 922 people forgot to eat or sleep while they shifted about the refractory bits of advertisements and tried to bring sense or—better still—con-nected nonsense out of the chaos. One voman worked for twelve hours on

To decide which story had won the prize was more perplexing work even than the building of an "ad-story." The 922 were sifted out, and a little sheaf of "ad-storles" decided upon as the cleverest and most unique, but to determine just which one had most merit was a delicate task.

There was a consultation. Expert opinions were solicited from the literary critic, the weather sharp, the earthquake editor, and the Woman of The Times, and after long palavering the conclusion was reached that Miss Etta B. Conner of No. 2726 Menlo avenue deserved The Times prize. It will be mailed to her tomorrow.

Her story had the most plot, was best planned, showed the best sustained ingenuity, and most completely fulfilled the requirements of the com-petition. There were others more hair-raising at first glance—such as the genial announcement of a wife for sale, genial announcement of a wife for sale, warranted in good condition, and pos-sessed of all the domestic virtues—but many of these failed to fulfill the primary requirement of the competi-tion—to tell a story, or make a connected statement. Many people crazy quilted laughable conceits, absurd combinations of wildly-incongruous ideas, witty twistings of sober-minded phrases, but the writers had forgoten that the "ad-stories" were to tell story. Many sent disconnected sentences, whose only humor lay in their incongruity.

Some were very serious indeed, and described in glowing language Call-fornia climate for mountain scenery. They were surprising examples of what straightforward English could be made from scraps.

Certain phrases seemed to catch people's fancy, and reappeared again and again, put to most divertingly diverse ses. "A word to the wise is sufficient was in a large proportion of the "ad-stories." "Safe or not safe" appeared again and again. "It is folly" was an often-repeated phrase. The writers urged their readers to "Get ready for" "September," "Eminent physicians,
"A dry year," "A young woman,
"The" "Greatest" "Wonder," "A bi time." the "Orpheum," and all sorts of nexpected happenings.

Of the "ad-stories" which really told a story, a love affair was a favorite theme, with "Roselle" as a constantly ceappearing heroine. The automobile turnished the inspiration for a third of the others. Camping expeditions were fruitful subject, and the competitors never tired of singing the praises of The Times" and of the "Times Sunday Magazine." A burst of song rose from the lips of Thomas A. Wotton of Long Beach, in part as follows:

'It is folly to fancy the Man with the Reduced to dress ducks for Liebig & Co." Hoe

Another poet, Ida H. Tupper, prob-ably inspired by her illustrious ances-tor—or namesake—once regarded as the gretest of American bards, compiled his little idyl:

"A lady to the seaside would go,
And wanted a girl to help and to sew;
The lady advertised in The Times, you

And had her needs filled the very

Ouch! The last word of that stanza was too painful to print, but it can be quietly whispered that it was "day." Exerybody will want to read Miss Conner's prize-winning story, so here it is. Some of the others, too good to be sacrificed to oblivion, are also embalmed in imperishable print and sent thundering down the corridors of time. There were scores of "ad-stories" which well deserved to be printed, either whollye or in part, because of inwholiye or in part, because of in-genious quirks or hilarious fun-mak-ing, but with 922 manupastes, there had to be a stopping place. QUICKLY EXTINGUISHED. Adolf Neuman Arrested Last Night on a Charge of Arson.

The department responded to a tele-phone alarm at 10:08 o'clock last night for a fire in the two-story house at No. 110 North Fremont avenue belonging to Mrs. Richardson. The house is ten-anted by three or four families, among anted by three or four families, among the occupants being Adolf Neuman, a saw filer and scissors grinder, who has three rooms on the top floor. The fire was in Neuman's kitchen, and was extinguished by the chemical engine before much damage was done.

An investigation followed and a quantity of old rags saturated with coal-oil were found on the floor around the stove. The stove had been stuffed with rags and paper, and oil poured over the n\u2248ss. Neuman was not at home when the investigation was made, but returned shortly after 11 o'clock. He was then arrested by Officer Woodward and sent to the City Jail on a charge of arson at the instance of one of the other occupants of the house, who will prosecute the charge against him.

for some time between Neuman and the other man, the trouble having orig-inated between the latter's children and inated between the latter's children and the former. The man, whose name was not learned, told the officer that he has been afraid for some time to leave the house at night and go down town for fear something would happen during his absence. Last night, however, he thought he would risk it, and upon his return found that an atempt had been made to burn the place.

Wanted to Fight.

W. S. Carter acquired a lively jag last night, and went down Broadway last night, and went down Broadway challenging everyone whom he met to combat. At the corner of Sixth street and Broadway he encountered a party of four, and insisted on having a mill without further delay. Officer Fowle happened along, however, and emphatically vetoed the proposition, escorting the bellicose person to the lockup on a charge of disturbing the peace.

Ex-Congressman Maguire Misrepre sents California Sentiment as to the Philippines-Alger Still a Candidate

INY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.1 WASHINGTON, Sept. 2 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] It is expected that the President will next week make another extremely important speech. He has just told at Plitsburgh about his Philippine policy, and on Monday he will go to Philadeiphia to attend the annual en-campment of the Grand Army of the Republic. When he addresses the en-campment it is fully expected he will tell the veterans exactly how he stands on the pension question, and what he thinks about the attacks upon Commissioner of Pensions Evans. And President undoubtedly will support Evans in such a flat-footed manner that attacks upon him will stop. There that attacks upon him will stop. There is a great lot of talk against Evans, but it comes mostly from pension attorneys, who would loot the entire treasury, if they got a good chance. The President is expected to show that is Commissioner of Pensions is for the old soldiers and against pension attorneys, and to tell his old comrades that the sooner they come to under-stand this fact the better it will be all around. Evans himself will attend the encampment, and probably will make a speech in his own defense.

Anti-Administration [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SEATTLE, Sept. 2. — Ex-Congress-man Maguire of California arrived here last night, to deliver an address before the local Single Tax Club. Discussing politics, he said

"The strong sentiment in California in favor of the administration has abated, and there is today a feeling that the war in the Philippines has been a great and long-continued sacriice of blood and treasure without adequate results. By this, I do not mean to say California will go Demoeratic: but I do say that the Democratic; but I do say that the Demo-crats in California have a chance. In my oninion the eDmocratic party in the next campaign, while fully maintaining the principles of the Chi-cago platform of 1896, must commence on distinctly current lines, the battle for the industrial and commercial freedom which is certain: to be fought out in the immediate future. The money question is an important par of the contest, but it is only a par of it.

There is no necessity for formal I believe that in the task on has weakened rather than trengthened the party in immediate ampaigns. But division has, I be-ieve, made a new Democracy, and if that is true, it is worth far more than nominal success under the leadership of monopolists and sympa-thizers with class privileges."

profitably.

Early in the season, when the syndicate was getting ready to begin operations, the crop was estimated at 350 cars. Now the estimate, according to the syndicate, has dropped to 150 cars, but disinterested information indicates that the actual yield will be about 250 Telegrams received yesterday indicate that the syndicate has overrated itself, and does not control the entire crop, and that some of the buyers who were deceived will have almonds to sell and probably pienty of them. There is likely to be fiere competition, and the probability is that the syndicate will not have things all its own way by any means.

A Big Dry Goods Shipment. Damaged by Water.

An unfortunate occurrence, the steamer "Chalmette" of the Southern Pacific's Sunset Route, which sailed from New York on or about the 14th of August, with freight for Pacific Coast points, encountered some extremely rough weather and shipped a great deal of water, doing much damage to her cargo. We were billed on her manifest for One Bale Flannelette, 2 Bales Towels, 1 Case Ladies' and Children's Wear, I Case Drapery Goods and

Two Cases Ladies' Cloaks and Suits.

These goods were all more or less damaged by water, wet through, soiled, stained, and a little home ingenuity will make them all right, but we cannot give them any place in our store. It won't do to mix them with other goods, the railroad company has paid us for them, and instructed us to sell them out the best we could.

PRIZE WORD-PATCHER.

MISS ETTA B. CONNER WINS THE TIMES AD-STORY COMPETITION.

A Thousand Ingenious Folk Spend Hours at the New Pastime Which Has Paled the Glory of Pigs-in-the-Clover.

Quaint, Incongruous and Witty Tales Woven by Clever People from Shreds and Tatters of the Advertisements in Thursday's Times-Love Stories, Announcements of Wives for Sale, and Rhapsodies on Climate.

try whose inhabitants wrote books by shaking up all the words in the dictionary in a big kaleidoscope, which constantly rearranged them in neverrepeated patterns. Whenever there was a gleam of sense, the mysterious phrases were written down. sulting books were said to be very in-

That is what the 922 competitors for the "ad-story" prize offered by The Times have been doing. They found "ad-storying" the most fascinating of pastimes, eclipsing the fifteen puzzle, pigs in the clover, liquid air, or the end of the century, in power to make end of the century, in power to make one forget that such things as clocks

The rules of the new game are simple. Bits of advertisements from Thursday's Times were to be pasted together to tell a story, and the best "ad-story" was to receive a prize of $5. That was all there was to the rules, but the possibilties were boundless and most enticing.

Did you try your hand? Such a snipping and sorting and pasting never was as ended at midnight Friday, when the first "ad-story" competition closed. The mails bulged with stories. There had been only thirty-six hours' notice, but 922 people forgot to eat or sleep while they shifted about the refractory bits of advertisements and tried to bring sense or—better still—con-nected nonsense out of the chaos. One woman worked for twelve hours on

There was a consultation. Expert opinions were solicited from the literary critic, the weather sharp, the earthquake editor, and the Woman of The Times, and after long palavering the conclusion was reached that Miss Etta B. Conner of No. 2726 Menio avenue deserved The Times prize. It will be mailed to her tomorrow.

Her story had the most plot, best planned, showed the best sustained ingenuity, and most completely fulfilled the requirements of the com-petition. There were others more hairraising at first glance-such raising at first glance—such as the genial announcement of a wife for sale, warranted in good condition, and possessed of all the domestic virtues—but many of these failed to fulfill the primary requirement of the competition—to tell a story, or make a connected statement. Many people crazy-quilted laughable conceits, absurd combinations of wildly-incongruous does with visitings of sober-minded deas, witty twistings of sober-minde phrases, but the writers had forgot-ten that the "ad-stories" were to tell a story. Many sent disconnected sences, whose only humor lay in their incongruity.

described in glowing language Call-fornia climate for mountain scenery. They were surprising examples of what straightforward English could made from scraps.

Certain phrases seemed to catch peoole's fancy, and reappeared again and igain, put to most divertingly diverse uses, "A word to the wise is sufficient" was in a large proportion of the "ad-stories." "Safe or not safe" appeared again and again. "It is folly" was an often-repeated phrase. The writer urged their readers to "Get ready for The writer "September," "Eminent physicians,"
"A dry year," "A young woman,"
"The" "Greatest" "Wonder," "A big lime," the "Orpheum," and all sorts of inexpected happenings.

Of the "ad-stories" which really told a story, a loye affair was a favorite theme, with "Roselle" as a constantly reappearing heroine. The automobile furnished the inspiration for a third of the others. Camping expeditions were a fruitful subject, and the competitors er tired of singing the praises of "The Times" and of the "Times Sunday Magazine." A burst of song rose from the lips of Thomas A. Wotton of Long Beach, in part as follows:

"It is folly to fancy the Man with the Hoe Reduced to dress ducks for Liebig

Another poet, Ida H. Tupper, probably inspired by her illustrious ancestor—or namesake—once regarded as the gretest of American bards, compiled this little idyl: "A lady to the seaside would go, And wanted a girl to help and to sew; The lady advertised in The Times, you

Ouch! The last word of that stanza was too painful to print, but it can be quietly whispered that it was "day." Exeryhody will want to read Miss Conner's prize-winning story, so here it is. Some of the others, too good to sacrificed to oblivion, are also embe sacrificed to oblivion, are also embalmed in imperishable print and sent thundering down the corridors of time. There were scores of "ad-stories" which well deserved to be printed, either whollye or in part, because of ingenious quirks or hilarious fun-making, but with 922 manupastes, there had to be a storolog place. ing, but with 922 manupa had to be a stopping place. QUICKLY EXTINGUISHED. Adolf Neuman Arrested Last Night on a Charge of Arson. The department responded to a tele-phone alarm at 10:08 o'clock last night for a fire in the two-story house at No. 110 North Fremont avenue belonging to Mrs. Richardson. The house is ten-anted by three or four families, among anted by three or four families, among the occupants being Adolf Neuman, a saw filer and scissors grinder, who has three rooms on the top floor. The fire was in Neuman's kitchen, and was extinguished by the chemical engine before much damage was done. An investigation followed and a quantity of old rags saturated with coal-oil were found on the floor around the stove. The stove had been stuffed with rags and paper, and oil poured over the ness. Neuman was not at home when the investigation was made, but returned over the ness.

Neuman was not at home when the investigation was made, but returned shortly after 11 o'clock. He was then arrested by Officer Woodward and sent to the City Jail on a charge of arson at the instance of one of the other occupants of the house, who will prosecute the charge against him.

It is said that bad blood has existed for some time between Neuman and the other man, the trouble having originated between the latter's childrenand the former. The man, whose name was not learned, told the officer that he has been afraid for some time to leave the house at night and go down town for fear something would happen during his absence. Last night, however, he thought he would risk it, and upon his return found that an atempt had been made to burn the place.

Wanted to Fight.

W. S. Carter acquired a lively jag last night, and went down Broadway last night, and went down Broadway challenging everyone whom he met to combat. At the corner of Sixth street and Broadway he encountered a party of four, and insisted on having a mill without further delay. Officer Fowle happened along, however, and emphatically veteed the proposition, escorting the bellicose person to the lockup on a charge of disturbing the page. the bellicose person to the lock a charge of disturbing the peace.

Ex-Congressman Maguire Misrepre-sents California Sentiment as to the Philippines-Alger Still a Candidate.

INY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.1 WASHINGTON, Sept. 2 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] It is expected that the President will next week make another extremely important speech. He has just remely important speech. He has just old at Pittsburgh about his Philippine campment it is fully expected he will tell the veterans exactly how he stands on the pension question, and what he thinks about the attacks upon Commissioner of Pensions Evans. And President undoubtedly will support Evans in such a flat-footed manner that attacks upon him will stop. There is a great lot of talk against Evans, but it comes mostly from pension attacks upon the commission houses induced several of the larger buyers to place orders for California almonds, with the understanding that their interests would be looked after when prices were made. Under the influence of this promise buyers refrained from bidding or figurations. By this, I do not cratic; but I do say that the Democratic; but I do say that the Democrats in California have a chance. In my opinion the eDmocratic party in the next campaign, while fully maintaining the principles of the Chicago platform of 1896, must commence on distinctly current lines, the battle for the industrial and commercial freedom which is certain; to be fought out in the immediate future. A CORNER IN ALMONDS.

THREE CALIFORNIA FIRMS SAID TO HAVE CREATED ONE.

Large Eastern Buyers Up a Stump on Account of Alleged Sharp Practice by Const Commission Men-Importers Pleased.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] California almonds are Dispatch.] California almonds are wanted in this market, but are difficult to obtain, the supply being controlled by a combine. There are alleged to have been some misrepresentations in securing control, and that fact promises policy, and on Monday he will go to Philadelphia to attend the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. When he addresses the encampment it is fully expected he will commission houses induced several of the second of the commission houses induced several of the second o

In the mean time a syndicate is said to have been formed by three California firms which bought up everything obtainable, paying these figures: Langue, 7 cents: Strake seedlings, 7½ cents; L. X. L. and Ne Plus Ultra, 9½ cents; Non-parall in control of the central cen other buyers and asked them to confirm their orders at from 20 to 25 per cent above cost.

One prominent handler said, in speaking of the matter, that if the syndicate expected to make enough money to retire from business on this season's almond sales, their course could be ex-plained. The only people pleased are the handlers of imported goods, who are jubilant over the turn affairs have taken. One dealer said yesterday that where he expected to be obliged to re-ship his Tarragonas and Ivicas, he would now be able to dispose of them profitably. Early in the season, when the syndicate was getting ready to begin opera-tions, the crop was estimated at 250 cars. Now the estimate, according to the syndicate, has dropped to 150 cars, but disinterested information indicates that the actual yield will be about 250

Telegrams received yesterday indicate that the syndicate has overrated itself, and does not control the entire crop, and that some of the buyers who were deceived will have almonds to sell and probably plenty of them. There is likely to be fierce competition, and the probability is that the syndicate will not have things all its own way by any means. cate that the syndicate has overrated

PACKING PLANT FIRE.

Damage at Kansas City Cannot Be Accurately Estimated.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 2 .- Jacob Dold's immense packing plant, situated in the bottoms on West Ninth street, was damaged to the extent of from $250,000 bottoms on West Ninth street, was damaged to the extent of from $250,000 to $300,000 by a fire that started in the fertilizing department after midnight. It is difficult to accurately estimate the loss. It is, however, amply covered by insurance. The fertilizer building with its contents of costly machinery was the only structure totally destroyed.

The first started at 12:45 in the fertilizing department. Within a few minutes, the flames had spread to the lard department, where tons of grease gave a start that could not be overcome. Within twenty minutes of the first alarm twenty streams were pouring water into the mass of flames. The water pressure was weak, however, and this fact, together with the nature of the matter feeding the flames, made the efforts of the firemen almost futile. The flames jumped quickly from building.

Shortly after 2 o'clock a huge tank of ammonia was reacheed and near it a giant hogshead of oil, which exploded, carrying into the air a great part of the roof of the plant. The firemen soon turned their streams on several large oleomargarine tanks, which stood on flimsy scaffolding of charred woodwork the walls having fallen away from them, to prevent, if possible, any further explosions. In doing so the number of streams on the main structure were materially reduced, and the flames were enable to gain headway.

Waves of heat almost unbearable drove the firemen and spectators back time and again, and it was with the utmost difficulty that effectual work was done. The plant fortunately was situated on the river, and this fact alone prevented a spread of the fire to other structures. Not until after 3 o'clock was the fire gotten under control. J. G. Towner, seneral manager of the plant, said it was impossible accurately to estimate the loss at this time, $300,000 by a fire that started in the

Innocent Man Serves a Term of Twenty-five Years in Prison. [A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]
Leach, who was reported dead, has returned to Elmira after an absence of twenty-five years, to claim property valued at several thousand dollars, left by his mother, and now in the possession of his step-father, Joseph Cilley, Leach survived twenty-five years in a California prison for a crime of which he was afterward proved innocent. His mother died while he was in prison, and he claims that it was known by his relatives here that he was after when the property was turned over to his step-father. CENSUS PROCLAMATION.

CUBANS NOT ALL PLEASED WITH THE PRESIDENT'S PLANS.

dependence-Idea of an Ameri-can Protectorate Believed to Be Growing Stronger With Influen-

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.] HAVANA, Sept. 2.—[By Atlantic Ca-le.] La Lucha, referring to President McKinley's census proclamation, says:
"A careful study of the proclamation does not reveal, as some seem to, think, reason for ringing the bells,—it is not a matter of any consequence that Secretary Root has made some ambiguous statements, for the census inspectors, if the United States government desires, will say anything.

say anything.

Manuel Sanguily, in a letter to Discussion, says: "The census procuamation has been the cause of surprise and dissatisfaction. The first time the President of the United States speaks to the Cubans he speaks with the most stinging dryness. Cubans would have welcomed brevity and even rudeness, stinging dryness. Cubans would have welcomed brevity and even rudeness, if only the document were frank and explicit. Obviously it does not refeat even remotely to the joint resolution of Congress, which we had a right to hope would be referred to, nor even to the time when the military occupation is to cease.

"It is obvious from the proclamation that the United States government has some plan, though it is not clear that the plain includes the fulfilment of the joint resolution. Very probably Congress will favor the independence of the Cubans, and be disposed to give loyal aid to the President in all his undertakings in Cuba."

Ramon Williams, former United States Consul-General here, thinks the idea of a protectorate is growing stronger every day. He believes that the Nuevo Pais, the principal advocate of a solution of the Cuban problem through a protectorate, represent very largely the feeling of the influential classes.

A good deal of surprise is expressed at the exceptional honors shown Col. Cespedes by Gen. Gomez and his adherents on his arrival in Havans. This tribute is interpreted as going the show the truth of the earlier reports that the Gomez party intends to nominate Cespedes for president if Gomes proves unavailable as a candidate.

CARTER'S CHARGES

He Accuses Gen. E. S. Otis of Being Guilty of Perjury. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT EXPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 2.—The Times-Her-ald says: "Charges of perjury and sub-ornation of perjury have been filed against Gen. Elwell S. Otis, commander against Gen. Elwell S. Otis, commander of the American army in the Philippines, with President McKinley, by Frank P. Blair, one of the counsel for Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, late government engineer at Savannah.

"Counsel Blair declares that at agarly date he will also file charges of perjury and subornation of perjury against Judge Advocate Col. Thomas H. Barr, with President McKinley. Col. Barr appeared in the famous trial of Carter for the government.

AT THE THEATERS.

N INTERESTING event in local theatricals is the opening of the rejuvenated Burbank Theater onight by Oliver Morosco of Morosco's Grand Operahouse, San Fran-cisco. The manager announces his in-tention to place this playhouse upon the footing of the foremost theater on this Coast. Improvements have been in progress for several weeks, and will continue for several weeks to come. It is promised that everything that experience can buy and money can procure to add to the comfort and accommodation of theater-goers will be found at the Burbank Theater. Particularly happy was Manager Morosco in the seelection of his opening attraction, the favorite Frawley Company, a dramatic organization which has a strong hold upon our theater-goers. Equally appropriate is the selection of the opening play. ling play, Sardou's great comedy-drama of the Napoleonic era, "Mme. Sans Géne." It is an exceptionally interesting play, chiefly for its illustration of historical characters and types of the French empire.

"Mme. Sans Gene" will bring out the strength of the Frawley Company, which the management claims is the largest, most expensive stock organiza-tion in the country. Mr. Frawley will himself play the part of Napoleon, and Miss Mary Van Buren, who is said to be peculiarly fitted in face and temperament for the role, will play Mme. Sans Géne. The management announces that the piece will be handsomely mounted with new and original scenery by Frederick Schafer, and stage furnishings of the Napoleonic period.

There will be a special matinée of "Mme. Sane Géne" tomogrow, and a regular matinée on Saturday. There will only be one weekly matinee during the stay of the Frawleys at the Bur-bank, and that will, of course, be on Saturday.

Usually the Orpheum management fancies that it is doing very well to introduce three or four new features in its weekly bill, on Monday evenings. Tomorrow, though, the limit is to be stretched a bit, when six new features will be added to the programme. This will constitute an almost entirely new bill throughout. Caron and Herbert, known in the vaudeville houses throughout the land as clever exponents of acrobatic work and knockabout comedy, lead on the list of newcomers. Three years ago Caron and Herbert played an engagement at the Orpheum and scored a really remarkable hit. They perform some of the most difficult acrobatic work that is attempted in the business.

Hall and Staley, who have a novelty which they exploit under the title of "The Twentieth Century Burglars" will be given a prominent place on the new bill.

The Freeze Bros. are jugglers of tambourines and batons, and as such claim to be supremely clever.

McMahon and King are rag-time comedians and singers.

A musical feature is to be given by Miss Etta Butler. She is a singer of some note in the East.

Mansfield and Wilbur are to produce a new sketch, called "Cupid's Middleman." The Cardownie troupe of Scottish dancers will remain on the bill. Esmeralda, the wire queen, and player of the xylophone and other instrument, is also retained.

A special matinée is announced to be given tomorrow afternoon

One of the more or less interesting features of the engagement of Mme. Modjeska will be the appearance of John E. Kellerd as her leading support. It is necessary that once in a while new blood should be brought to the legitimate stage, for otherwise we should see acting that is dominated entirely by tradition, and a monotonous tameness would probably result. Mr. Kellerd has made a name for himself in the past few years which started with his memorable performance in "Held by the Enemy." He has power and personality, and where such has been required, the managers have invariably looked to him first.

such has been required, the managers have invariably looked to him first. It is due to this fact that he has been for many seasons what is termed professionally a "jobbing" actor: in other words, an actor engaged not for stipulated periods, but for the New York runs of new productions, and there have been few of any note in recent seasons outside of the Frohman stock company offerings that have not included Mr. Kellerd in the cast. But this season is not his debut in the legitimate drama, for it was on the tracic stage and in the costume play that he had his early training. Mr. Kellerd will be seen here as Louis XVI in the new play of "Marle Antoinette," as Earl Leicester in "Mary Stuart," as Benedict in "Much Ado About Nothing," and in the title role of "Macbeth."

While the announcement of the definite arrangement of the Modjeska repertoire is not at present forthcoming, it is officially stated that it will include "Marle Antoinette," the new play by Clinton Stuart: "Macbeth," "Mary Stuart." and "Much Ado About Nothing." The elaborate nature of the scenic effects which Manager John C. Fisher is said to have provided, together with the collective talent of the players should certainly lend a regular dramatic festival flavor to the engagement, and it promises to be the most important event of the season, which the great Polish actress will on this occasion inaugurate. The public has a few days longer to send in its choice among the plays mentioned, and by doing so Manager Wyatt, when he makes his definite announcement on Wednesday morning, will be echoing the wishes of his patrons. The engagement will be for one week beginning on Monday, September 1, with both Wednesday and Saturday matinées.

[Chicago Evening Post:] Whether

[Chicago Evening Post:] Whether or not there is an increase in the number of the sketches into vaudeville is difficult to say; they will ever be a valuable contribution, but it may be doubted if they are a requisite.

Those now in demand are rather the farcical sketches smartly played than those dependent for their success upon the reputation of the leading performer. For a time the introduction into vaudeville of a dramatic star was of value, irrespective of the worth of his performance. Not that the player is apt. in any degree, to add to the value of the bill, for in many cases the dramatic sketches detracted from the merit of the programme. But curlosity drew to the theater many persons who were desirous of seeing some famous player on the vaudeville stage. In this way the so-called "dramatic vaudevillers" served their purpose, though they did not always give entire zatisfaction. At the better class of houses the regular audiences put up with a twenty or twenty-five minute sketch of more or less seriousness for the sake of the refinement of the bill, but they never placed any great value upon this feature, and in many instances protested against the seriousness of sketches.

As one of the eastern vaudeville managers says, vaudeville is dependent upon no single feature for its prosperity, but rather cpon the variety of the offering, and within the elastic limits of the term vaudeville may be embraced anything from a bit of Shakespearean tragedy to trained elephants or educated horses. It is this feature of the business that is the most valuable, since in this varied offering is pretty certain to be found something which shall appeal to nearly every taste, while a dramatic performer has to depend upon that portion of the theater-going public which prefers comedy or tragedy, as the case may be.

The first presentation of Israel Zang-will's "Children of the Ghetto" on any stage, was made at Deal, England, for copyright purposes, July 25. The admission charged vias one guinea, the equivalent of $5 in American money. The audience consisted of but one person. Deal is an out-of-the-way place, principally noted for the smuggler who infested it in time past. It was a congenial atmosphere, therefore, to Mr. Zangwill, who was most anxious principally noted for the smugglers who infested it in time past. It was a congenial atmosphere, therefore, to Mr. Zangwill, who was most anxious to "smuggle" his production and keep the event secret. The law requires that such a performance be advertised in the regular way, and Mr. Zangwill had considerable difficulty in getting his show-bills printed. He feared that this would lead to a "leak," and that London newspapermen would attempt to witness the play and thus learn its exact story and situations, which have been most carefully guarded and, will not be made public until its first American production in Washington, September 18. He finally surmounted this difficulty by having this work done at the office of the Jewish Chronicle in London at night by one man, the editor being pledged to secreey. Mr. Zangwill succeeded in his purpose, and not a hint of the story was given publicity.

"Feminine competition on the stage,"

"Feminine competition on the stage," says Harrison Grey Fiske in the Dramatic Mirror, "is sharp and incessant, as is the competition of men, but, while the woman who relies upon beauty and fine raiment for success may attract attention for a time, it is the woman who works and who constantly enlarges her vision and increases her artistic value that rises from station to station until legitimate prominence—or, in the case of genius, fame—is her reward. The story of stage genius has too often been a story of early and long-continued hardship before recognition—sometimes of a labor so long necessary that health has succumbed and middle age, with the blights that accompany it in such circumstances finds the ambitious with little faculty for enjoying the success that is won at last."

"El Capitan," is thus discussed by a

"El Capitan," is thus discussed by a London critic: "There is, in the first place, De Wolf Hopper himself. He might, with point, transpose that name to De Holf Wopper, for he is quite a colossus. The stalls commune with his feet; his chin is on terms with the gallery. From the harmless, unnecessary speech he made at the cenclusion, one gathered he was a giant of kindly and humorous disposition. His voice is deep and dreadful, but it has a genial ring. There was a sweet little ingenue, Miss. Jessie Mackaye: a statuesque lady, Miss Nella Bergen, with a voice that soars among the higher C's and neighboring vocal summits, and a bright enough crowd of chorus beauties, whose costumes did not err on the side of reticence. All these stand in a row and shout. What they shout has often rhythm, sometimes melody, but never the inspiration that one would have expected from the composer of the "Washington Post." It comes to this then—if shouting will insure another American triumph, 'El Capitan' is that already. Unfortunately, noise is now no new thing. But one can never tell."

The London Times declares that it speaks well for the taste of the British

The London Times declares that it speaks well for the taste of the British public that Isidore de Lara's opera. "Messaline." did not repeat the success de scandale which it had in Monte Carlo. All the critics deplore the fact that the composer, who doubtless has talent, should have followed the young Italians in choosing a story of brutal sensuality, unrelieved by any touch of honest love. The Telegraph explains that "formerly all the libretils thad to do was to write a book that should provide situations which would justify elaborate scenes, the words of which were regarded as pegs whereupon to hang effective musical phrases and roulades. The modern composer, however, is expected to fimbue himself with the spirit of the subject he treats and his music must be a faithful reflection of the inner meaning of the libretto, so to speak, to express its very heartbeats. Hence, a sordid subject is now far more detrimental to the composer than formerly."

all the branches of music, singling is the one about which people claim to know the most, yet know the least. Incorrect singing, if it is audiciently pretentious, arouses much enthusiasm, and the general public makes little discrimination between a Resike and a fourth-rate vaude-lile singer who has paid the manager of singing it is difficult to judge, as the personal influence of the singer ex-ercises a direct force on the audience. A singer who can sing trills, scales and staccato rapidly and accurately, after encore by thus amazing her audice of temperament. Between thes two extremes the polished legato style of the finished, cultivated vocalist is lost.

The highest type of song is that which most accurately voices the emotional content of the words. The greatest singer of the lyric stage is the one who can best impersonate the dramatic roles. The great concert singer is one who excels in artistic songs. There may be a difference of opinion as to the correct interpretation of a song, but whether a person sings badly or not is a matter of fact.

There are certain well-established qualities of vocal technic. The voice may be a great natural gift, as in the case of Fatti, or it may be the result of studious cultivation of only ordinary material, as is said of Jean de Reszke. But the fundamental requirements of a good voice are that of only ordinary material, as is said of Jean de Reszke. But the fundamental requirements of a good voice are that its pitch be true, the voice be equalized. Walter Damrosch's criticism on Melba's voice was: "It is all one."

The secret of good tone production is the proper management of the breath. Tone should be absolutely pure. No breath should escape while singing that is not vocalized. Tones should be free from any muffled effects from the throat or mouth. A good singer should have a perfect legato style as the foundation of his delivery. Tones should always be given with an exact attack. A good singer should have perfect control of the gradual increase or diminishment of a sustained tone. Pure pronunciation is absolutely essential. Breath should never be inhaled when it interrupts the musical idea. The high purpose of song is deep, emotional expression.

Although these requirements seem simple they are the foundation of good singing.

Belative Pitch.

Constantin von Sternberg, in an article in Music of the Modern World, says: "It has often occurred to me that students of stringed and wind instruments have a great advantage over piano students, in the fact that they have no guide for either their intonation or their technique, except their own ear. In giving quality to a tone, in fact while producing a tone, they have to inquire of their ear as to the exactness of the pitch. The pianist, when noticing an impure tone, simply sends for the tuner. This lesser dependence of the pianist upon the ear has proved to be very conducive to a neglect of that control which the ear alone can exercise. Thus it comes that many, piano players do not hear anything more in a melody than the rise and fall of intervals and the rhythm. The dynamic element is lost sight of. Yet it is this element which most directly appeals to the emotional faculties of the listener, to whom intervals and rhythm are only intellectual concepts. The dynamic element in music is the one which alone addresses our inner life, our emotional faculties. If beautiful harmonies, melodic intervals, interesting rhythms are to affect more than our mere intelligence, if they are to penetrate into the innermost sanctuary of our feelings, they must be introduced by the dynamic element. A melody played or sung in one monotonous degree of force has no effect upon us beyond awakening a transient interest in its intervals, which is a purely intellectual occupation. If it is true that the human voice is the most appealing musical instrument, it must be for the reason that the human voice, in its natural condition is commelled. in its natural condition, is compelled to make dynamic changes correspond-ing to the rise and descent of in-

The Grau Company.

[Chicago Post:] In some roles surely Alvarez is Jean de Reszke's superior, though it must not be thought that he is the greater artist of the two intellectually, for the latter has no equal in Wagner's parts. Of Scotti, the new baritone, little is Of Scottl, the new baritone, little is known here. A new baritone for Italian and French opera will strengthen the company decidedly. As to the other new singers, Bertram is a German of good reputation, a member of the Munich company. Susan Strong has sung in this company, but not with great success. Several years of study, however, are said to have improved her greatly. Eleanor Broadfoot is an English woman, most of whose work has heretofore been on the concert stage in that country. Olitzka and Van Cauteren are well known in this country.

Cauteren are well known in this country.

When the season begins, it is not unlikely that Eames will be among the singers, nor has anything been heard which would lead one to think that Lehmann will not return for at least 2 part of the winter.

In als latest interview in London Mr. Grau said: "We begin earlier than ever before, sailing in the misse of September and opening in New Haven, October 9, and visiting such cities as Hartford. Springfield. Worcester, Providence, Montreal. Toronto, Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis, indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Chicago and Boston before the regular season in New York."

"Tod" and the Tenor.

[Etude:] Jean de Reszke was pacing his room at the Glisey House one morning humming snatches from his role in "Le Prophéte." when there came a knock at the door, and Mr. Pearson, the chief clerk of the hotel, stepped in with a mysterious air.

"Are you busy, monsieur?" he haked. "Tra', Ja, lala, dum di dum, bim bim, la lale..."

"Are you busy, monsieur?" repeated the patient clerk, who was familiar with M. de Reszke's fits of artistic absorption.

"Oh, he always wins," said M. Jean proudly.

"Then you 'fix' races over there, too, do you? Well, I'll come. I've got to go now. I see you were taking a preliminary when I came in. So long, 'Jimmy,' I'm glad to have met you. You're dead game."

"Good-by Tod,' come soon again."

"I will, old sport. Say, do you want a 'good thing' at New Orleans today? Play Cyrano, he'll win by a nose. That's one of Sharkey's. So long, 'Jimmy.'"

And the meeting between the two champions was over.

Opera in English.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] Maurice Grau has been expressing himself on the subject of giving grand opera in English, and as is usually the case when this able gentleman gives voice his views are decidedly interesting, no matter whether we may be inclined to subscribe to them or not.

"In theory," he says, "there is no good objection to grand opera in English, and there are sound arguments for it. Even the Wagner operas would be enjoyed better by the general public if sung in English, and how vastly more enjoyable to all but a few would be an opera like 'Don Glovann' if sung in English. Yes. I can say unreservedly that if circumstances would permit I would even put 'Lohengrin' in English. But circumstances won't permit. It's all right in theory, but it's not all right in practice. When you come to sift the objections you get down finally to just one, and that is that the artists as a rule don't wish to sing in English. Some of them, of course, can't speak English, but that doesn't matter so much when you come to consider that Plancon, for instance, sings an entire opera in admirable German without being able to speak a single word of that language in conversation. It isn't the difficulty of acquiring English, but it seems to be an objection to the language in conversation. It isn't the difficulty of acquiring English, but it seems to be an objection to the language in the would be somehow a degradation. I suppose it must be because, unhappily, English is not the native language of grand opera. Englishmen and Americans don't write grand operas. As soon as the English is not the native language of grand opera. Englishmen and Americans don't write grand opera. As soon as the English speaking race begins to produce successful grand opera, then the stigma on the language in the minds of singers will begin to disappear."

THE social galety of the week here has centered very largely about the yacht Rover and its departure for the South Seas. This fine large schooner has been chartered for a South Sea voyage by R. Barret Fithian one of the best known local and coast club men. During the time that she lay anchored off the Country Club here she was the object of general interest among society people. The coming of this yacht was the first event of the kind here. While there has been considerable boating here in a small way, yachting upon so large a scale has never been tried before.

On Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. Fithian held a reception at the Country Club and aboard the Rover. A luncheon was served at the club and boats were kept busy all afternoon taking parties of to the yacht. The sumptious furnishings of the interior of the vessel have been a matter of much comment here.

During the first of the week the ladies of the Corbral Euchre Club gave an evening to their gentlemen friends, the scene of the entertainment being the G.A.R. Hall in the Fithian building. Cards were played until a late hour, when prizes were awarded and refreshments were served.

The engagement is announced of Miss Panchita Diblee of the old Diblee family of this city to William T. Summers, now a banker of Juneau, Alaska. The marriage will take place some time next month. Mr. Summers and Miss Diblee move here in the ultra fashionable set, Miss Diblee being a descendant of the famous old De la Guerra family. Mr. Summers was for several years the teller of the County National Bank here. Two years ago he removed to Juneau, where he now owns a prosperous banking institution. This engagement will be welcomed by local society people.

Disorders

AND WEAKNESSES OF MEN Treated Until Cured Without Charge Unless Successful.

A RE YOU THE MAN YOU SHOULD BE? Every man who is suffering from any of the train of symptoms subsequent to early indiscretions, overwork, worry or excesses of any na-ture, is not capable of squarely facing the battle of life and making the most of his abilities.

R. STERLING & CO. CURE all Disorders and Weaknesses of Men Only. Contracted ailments, par-tial or complete loss of vital force, un-natural drains which sap the vitality, wasting away and atrophy of the organs, piles, hydrocele, varicose veins and all blood taints and nerv us disorders, whether resulting from coors, excesses or badly treated cases. We make a specialty of this class of disease and treat nothing else. Our experience enables us to guarantee a cure in each and every case we accept for treat-ment or make no charge.

Home Treatment.

Our methods for treating patients at a distance are the most successful known to the medical profession. When possible to call at our office, do so, as any honest doctor will tell you that he can get better results by personally examining his patients. If impossible to call, write, giving leading symptoms and history of case, and we will give you the best treat-case, and we will give you the best treatment availatle.

Dr. Sterling & Co's, methods are the result of twenty-tive years of carful study and successful practice. A call will convince you that they have the best equipped offices and most complete line of medical and electrical appliances of any institution in the West.

Charges always moderate: patients can arrange to pay only when perfectly cured, or monthly payments if preferred. Hours 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and every evening 7 to 8. Sundays 10 to 1. Consultation free. Address

SATIN CERATE-Mrs. Weaver-Jackson's Wonderful Skin Food makes a fast friend of every one who uses it, as the following letter from Rev. Burt Estes Howard will testify:

MRS. WEAVER-JACKSON.

Dear Madam—os Angeles, Cal.

I had intended before leaving Los Angeles to purchase a supply of your Cerate, but in the rush incident upon moving I forgot it until too late. Is there any place in this city where the preparation can be obtained! I have tried many things for use after shaving and I find the Cerate by all odds the very best article of them all.

In case the Cerate is not on sale in Boston, if you will mail me a box of it, with a bill for the same. I will remit by return post. Yours most sincerely, Satin Cerate comes in 25 and 50-cent bottles. Send or call for Free Sample.

DON'T BE SCARED.

is a good deal of unnecessary alarm manifested nowadays about trusts. That evils result from great combinations of capital is true. On the other hand such combinations are not without their benefit to the masses of the people. The introduction of laborsaving machinery generally, if not always, results in temporary injury to the interest of individuals, but the masses are benefited. When two men of moderate means join their interests to establish a larger business than either could establish alone, and by purchasing in larger quantities are able to get more favorable terms, it is a combination of capital, but it does not follow that their patrons must suffer as a consequence. The establishment of a corporation by means of which a factory is built is a combination of capital, but such use of capital is not generally regarded as imperiling the interests of the people. A factory employing 500 men to operate laborsaving machinery in making shoes may change the occupation of 500 cobblers who pegged and sewed by hand in their own shops, but the town where the factory is located begins to grow at once, the whilom cobblers find they have easier work and shorter hours, and the whole population get their shoes at cheaper prices.

So far the evolution in combination of capital has proved harmless in spite of the serious apprehensions that have been expressed at every new step in the process. The next step is the trust, or combination of smaller combina tions of factories, corporations and other enterprises involving large capital. These have been developing rapidly during a year or two past, and the usual alarm has been duly expressed. These trusts are simply associations of industrial corporations, a majority at least of the stock in each of which is transferred to a board of trustees, who, while issuing to the stockholders certificates showing their interests and their rights to dividends. exercise the voting power of the stock in electing boards of directors in the various corporations and in other ways, and thus direct the policy of all, regulating the production, lowering its cost and increasing the profits. The principal source of apprehension from such an arrangement is in regard to an advance of the prices which the consumer must pay. In regard to the practical effect in this respect, the New York Tribune, which has been of late giving considerable attention to this matter of trusts, has collected some facts and made a table of quotations which tend to show that the fear on this score is not warranted. The Tribnne says:

"The simplest comparison of prices of many different kinds is by percentages; taking quotations on November 1 as 100, the latter quotations may be best shown by percentages to that base. The quotations used for most products are those given in regular tables by Dun's Review, which embrace cotton and twelve quotations of cotton goods, the verage of 100 quotations of wool by Coates Brothers and twelve quotations of woolen goods, ten of hides at Chicago, ten of leather at Boston and twelve of boots and shoes; quotations of Bessemer, anthracite and gray-forgeig iron, and of nine representative products of iron and steel. To these

Surely, if some of the old Puritan an cestors of these unworthy Americans could revisit the earth, they would open their eyes in amazement at the actions of their degenerate descendants.

A PATRIOT FOR SPOILS ONLY.

The Times rushes to the front i double time to acknowledge the receipt of a miscellaneous assortment of circulars, facsimile letters, etc., from Magnus A. Hess of Chicago, setting forth the alleged fact that Hess is "the original McKinley man:" that he organised the first McKinley Club in the United States; that he subsequently organized divers and various clubs, societies, and "sich," in furtherance of Maj. McKinley's Presidential candi dacy. In short, that he exerted himself to the best of his limited ability as did some millions of other citizens, to aid and bring about the election of Maj. McKinley to the Presidency. All of which may or may not be true. It certainly is not important.

But Magnus A. Hess of Chicago is, it seems, a man with a grievance; also a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief by the gallon. His grievance and his manifold sorrows are set forth at length in the consignment of circulars above referred to. "After all the hard work I have done in behalf of President McKinley," he says, "and the money I have expended, and the brainwork it took to overthrow the ma chine and secure his nomination, have all been overlooked. Other 'Noodle-Jays' are getting the credit. It's a shame! I don't envy others getting places, but I do wish to be rewarded a little for what I have actually done.' Mr. Hess goes on to state, further, that he has printed millions of circulars, badges, etc., "at a time when it did the most good," and adds, in his own breezy and picturesque English:

"I had been urged on before the election of 1893, and joilled along until now, always having been promised that I would be well provided for. President McKinley aught to be ashamed of himself, the way he has treated me, and the Original McKinley Boys, who have stood by him and done the dirty work in his hour of need.

have stood by him and done the dirty work in his hour of need.

I herewith give notice that I positively dont want a position under his administration, because he has surrounded himself with Milioners', Representatives of Trusts', Corporations' and they are spoiling his administration. If by some way he could get rid of that 'bunch-of-weeds,' he would be the second Lincoln, and should get closer to the people and should get closer to the people. uld get closer to the better friend of the w and should get closer to the people, and be a better friend of the workingmen and the masses.

I only want what is right, the money that I have spent in his behalf from Oct. 20, 1892, until his behalf from Oct. 20, 1892, until his belection, the five years of the best part of my life, that I have devoted night and day, to help make him President, I herewith make him a Christmas Present. But the money it has cost me, I want for my children. It was God that urged me on with this work, as there never was a moment. work, as there never was a moment the last seven years, that I ever thought he would not be elected.

It is obvious, from a perusal of the boye, that Mr. Hess of Chicago has deliberately permitted the feline to escape from the bag. Confessing himself, at the outset, a "Noodle-Jay," he complains that others of his kind have fared better than he-which, of course, s a bad thing, if true. We are not quite certain what a "Noodle-Jay" is but we are quite willing to concede that, whatever it may be, Mr. Hess is probably one of the critters. The case of Mr. Hess is truly deplorable, and it is as clear as anything car be that something or other ought to be lone about it. Just what can be done, under the circumstances, is not apparent at first glance. Inasmuch as Mr. Hess doesn't want any office (for so will have to be abandoned, as a matter of course. If Mr. Hess were not so bitterly opposed to accepting office under the McKinley administration, he might perhaps be given the Podunk postoffice, or some other position equally lucrative and unlaborious, where his peculiar talents would shine even as a decayed mackerel shines in the moonlight. The position of Secretary of War vacated by the resignation of Mr. Alger, is now filled by a gentleman who is do ing quite well, and it would hardly be fair to turn him out and give Mr. Hess the job, even supposing that the latter would be willing to make the sacrifice Should the President himself resign in favor of Hess it would do no good, for Mr. Hess is neither Vice-President nor in the line of succession. This sort of relief for Hess is, therefore, as it seems. impracticable.

The only practical solution of the problem which we can think of at this noment is for Mr. Hess to apply to the Democratic campaign managers in his endeavor to get "what is right," to wit, the money that he spent from October 20. 1892, until McKinley's election. It "goes without saying" that the five years of the best part of Mr. Hess's life, which he spent so lavishly, and even recklessly, in making Maj. McKinward about crossing out the names of ley President, are beyond recall. But the money is a different affair, altogether. We are not in a position to promise anything, but we have no doubt that if Mr. Hess would apply to the Bryan managers they would be willing to reimburse him to the exten of at least thirty cents, if he would agree to devote his time and talents to the forthcoming Bryan campaign as assiduously as he devoted them to the Highness sent word that he would be McKinley campaign. His success in the mugwumps, the Atkinsonians, and Aguinaldists-after Bryan into the Presidency. Hess would no doubt be quite willing under the circumstances, to take some chances. In the nature of things he could not expect divine cooperation in the work of electing Bryan; but as Mr Hess has now acquired a vast fund of experience to draw upon, he could probably worry along without divine help. At all events, if the Lord didn't help the other fellow, Hess would have a fighting chance, and be able to show the populace one of the allfiredes scrimmages of the century. In the midst of his sorrows Mr. Hes has at least one consolation: There are others. There are other "Noodle Javs" by the thousands-some of them in California-who worked ostentatiously and even violently for McKinley, who have not yet realized the fruition of their patriotic fervor. There are some of these N. J.'s not a thousand miles from Los Angeles, who are now denouncing the administration, like Hess, because they didn't get offices There were, it is true, about a thousand applicants for each and every position, but this fact cuts no ice with the kickers. Being patriots for spoils only, they must needs kick if spoils do not come their way. But Hess, of Chicago, is entitled to the distinction of having made of himself the most picturesque, exuberant, flamboyant and unmitigated ass of the whole long-

THE WELCOME TO BATTERY D.

Preparations for the reception to Bat tery D, First Battalion California Heavy Artillery, upon their return to Los Angeles are well advanced, and the event promises to be an unqualified success. It is expected that the men will be mustered out (at San Fran cisco) on the 21st inst., and that they will arrive in this city on the 24th. While the programme for their reception is not entirely completed, the fea tures decided upon by the War Board, which has the matter in charge, are such as to make the occasion a memor

A procession is to form at the depot and move through the streets to the Armory on Spring street. soldiers are to be garlanded with flowers by the Red Cross. A banquet will be given in the evening, with short speeches by local orators and responses by officers of the battery. A military ball is to be given on the evening following. The matter of greatest present mo ment is that of raising funds to defray the necessary expenses of the entertainment. Three methods have been decided upon by the War Board. The generous offer of the Orpheum management, placing the entire theater and its corps of attachés and performers at the disposal of the projectors for a special benefit performance, has been accepted. and a handsome sum is certain to be realized from this source. A large number of unique and appropriate badges (to be designed by the artist of The Times) will be printed and sold at $1 apiece, and a beautiful souvenir programme will be provided for the occasion, which will be sold at a moderate price.

It is hoped that, from these sources and from private subscriptions, at least $5000 may be realized. It is desirable that more money be raised than is needed for the actual expenses of the reception, in order that some money may be turned over to the Red Cross to provide for the temporary care of the sick and destitute among the men of the battery. This is even more important than the reception itself. The he himself declares in plain terms,) all funds of the local Red Cross are low, idea of helping him out in that way and it is absolutely necessary that they be replenished to enable the society to perform the service indicated. San Francisco raised over $60,000 for the reception of her returning volunteers. Los Angeles should be able to raise $5000, or more, without difficulty. The benefit performance at the Orpheum will be given on Thursday afternoon, September 14, and will be participated n by members of the Modjeska and the Frawley companies, in addition to the Orpheum talent. It is hoped to realize not less than $1600 from the sale of boxes alone, for this performance, which is certain to be one of the finest of its kind ever seen in the city. From now on, the preparations of the War Board for the reception will go steadily forward, and with the cooperation and assistance of public-spirited citizens, sucess will be assured.

Citizens! come forward with your patriotic help, thus honoring our solliers, our city, our State and yourselves. One man killed, another dangerously wounded, and eighteen more or less injured, is the record of an attack by strikers upon non-union workmen at West Pittston, Pa., yesterday. The right of every man to sell his labor to whom he pleases, and upon such terms as can be agreed upon by both parties, is as sacred and indefeasible as is the right of a man to sell any property which absolutely his own. IN THE CONTRA CAMP.

States convenes in December, the Democratic side will feel as if stricken by a cyclone. Nearly all the intellectual strength of the Democrats has been swept away by successive Republican freshets. publican freshets. It is not extrava-gant to say that when the last Con-gress adjourned on the 4th of March last an overwhelming majority of the intellect on the Democratic side retired to private life. Not since the States of the South seceded, in 1861, did so many men of experience and ability retire from the Senatorial arena as on the adjournment of the Fifty-fifth Congress.—Not only was the Demo-Congress.—Not only was the Demo-cratic side hit numerically with dis-astrous force, but its strongest men were made-the victims. It is true that Morgan and Bacon, and Vest and Dan-iel are left, and Lindsay and Caffery, sometimes, but not often, do duty with the Democrats, but White, Gray, Tur-pie, Gorman, Mills, Faulkner and Pasco will not be passed on the part voll call. will not be named on the next roll call At least five of them, White of Cali-fornia, Gray of Delaware, Turpie of Indiana, Gorman of Maryland, and Mills of Texas, were among the very

At least five of them, White of Callfornia, Gray of Delaware, Turple of Indiana was the greatest master of English in Congress, a man of superbattainments, and as a Senator stood very high. David Turple of Indiana was the greatest state of Senator Form the Senate will be a closs to the public service and a distinct lowering of the intellectual tone of the highest legislative chamber.

When Richard Olney, who it will be freely admitted was no mean judge, was Secretary of State, he regarded White of California as the ablest international lawyer in Congress, and frequently said so. Among his colleagues in the Senate Mr. White's reputation as a lawyer was very high, and as a debater he stood in the front rank. Gray of Delaware, appointed a Circuit Judge by President McKinley, is a man of superb attainments, and as a Senator stood very high. David Turple of Indiana was the greatest master of English in Congress, a man of vast learning, perhaps, with the exception of Senator Hoar, the greatest scholar of Maryland and Aldrich of Rhode Island were great cronies. Gorman was the head of the Democratic steering committee, and Aldrich discharged a like function for the Republicans. When a tariff bill was under discussion in the Senate, it would be withdraw from the chamber through the south door. A few moments later Aldrich would withdraw through the south door. A few moments later Aldrich would withdraw through the south door. A few moments later Aldrich would withdraw through the south door. A few moments later Aldrich would withdraw through the south door. A few moments later Aldrich would withdraw through t of English in Congress, a man of vast learning, perhaps, with the exception of Senator Hoar, the greatest scholar of his time in Congress. Gorman of Maryland is a man of undoubted ability, vast experience and exquisite tact With the possible exception of Quay he was the greatest master of practical politics and the science of organization in the Senate. Mills of Texas, elo bold, manly, was the only Senate capable of coping Aldrich of Rhode Island in tariff dis-cussion, and one of the few men in the Senate who always had the courage of his convictions. The absence of these men from the Senate will be felt by their party, and regretted by the older Republican Senators.

Vest of Missouri is, perhaps, taking him all in all, the ablest debater who has been in the Senate in more than a dozen years. He is a very brilliant man, quick at repartee, a master of satire and irony, with a wit that never falled, and a profound knowledge of pending questions and problems. But Vest is nearing his end. He has been dying for five years, and it is more than probable that he will never appear in the Senate again. At last accounts he was surrounded by his family and doctors in Canada, and the reports from his bedside were not encouraging. Morgan is old—he is hearing 80—and though still vigorous and full of language, cannot be expected to display the same activity and interest in general questions that he did adozen years ago. Lindsay of Kentucky and Caffery of Louisiana are very strong men, but they are seldom in accord with their Democratic associates, and not always in accord with each other. Both bolted Bryan in '96, and supported Palmer and Buckner. Now Lindsay is in favor of national expansion, while Caffery is fiercely opposed to it. Morgan favors expansion and Vest is opposed to it. Thus the Democratic remaining in the Senate are all split up on nearly all the great questions, without any prospect of getting together to give battle to the compact and numerically strong party of the administration. administration.

It has often been observed in the Senate that personal friendships are Senate that personal friendships are seldom confined to party. The original Damon and Pythias of the Senate were Damon and Pythias of the Senate were Butler of South Carolina and Don Cameron of Pennsylvania. They were inseparable. Wherever one was there you would be sure to find the other. This friendship was partly inherited. When old Simon Cameron was first elected to the Senate there were some charges of corruption made against him, and an effort was made to prevent him from taking his seat. The vote was close, and Plerce Butler of South Carolina broke from his party and was close, and Pierce Butler of South Carolina broke from his party and voted to seat old Simon. When Pierce Butler's son, Gen. M. C. Butler, was first elected to the Senate, he was charged by the Republicans with re-sponsibility for what was called the "Hamburg massacre," and an effort was made to exclude him from his seat. Don Cameron, remembering the favor was made to exclude him from his seat. Don Cameron, remembering the favor extended to his father by Butler's father, cast his vote, and used his influence to seat Butler. This was the beginning of their friendship, and it still continues, though neither of them is now in the Senate. The friendship of Butler and Cameron was injurious to both in their home States. The Democrats of South Carolina accused Butler of being influenced by the Republican Cameron, and the Republicans of Pennsylvania charged Cameron with being a mere tool of Butler, the Democrat.

being a mere tool of Butler, the Democrat.

Quay and Vest are very warm personal friends. Both are good poker players and both love the game. They are fishermen, too, and frequentify fish in each other's company. Quay is not a talker, white Vest is generally regarded as the best talker in the Senate. Quay is an excellent man of business, while Vest has no business ability whatever. During what was known as the Kansas City boom. Vest cleared some money, perhaps $20,000. He immediately turned it over to Quay to Invest for him. That $20,000 under the careful fostering of Quay has now grown to about a quarter of a million. Quay has frequently said that if he had been as careful of his own money as he was of Vest's he would be worth several millions instead of about one hundred thousand. By the way, Quay is a man very generally misunderstood. He is one of the bestread men in public life, and owns one of the finest private libraries in Washington. Quay taught school in Texas before the civil war, and tells with glee about stealing a saddle to ride from Columbla to Austin, a distance of 200 miles, to join the Texas Rangers. The corps was complete when he reached Austin, and he had to return much disappointed. When the civil war broke out Quay tossed a coin to determine whether he should join the Confederate army or return to Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania won, and he boarded a ship at Galveston and made his way to New York. Quay is the most popular of the Republicans with the southern pemocratic Senators.

Allison of Iowa and Cockrell of Missouri are great chums. Both have served on the Appropriations Committee for more than twenty years. Allison is now chairman of the committee, and Cockrell was chairman when the Democrats were in the majority. Politics never interferes with their business. They pull together in everything. They have similar habits. Both are very abstemious. Cockrell has never tasted liquor in his life, and smokes a corncob pipe. Allison likes a sped circo liquor in his life, and smokes a cornection pipe. Allison likes a good cigar, and sometimes takes a giass of wine. Missouri and Iowa never suffer when appropriations are made. Cockrell and Allison have personal servitors on the Senate pay roll. When the Democrats are in the majority, Cockrell takes care of Allison's men, and when the Record Re Senate pay roll. When the Democrats are in the majority, Cockrell takes care of Allison's men, and when the Republicans have the upper hand, Allison cares for Cockrell's "faithful few." Cockrell, Allison and Gorman have more of their personal followers employed in the departments at Washington than all the other Senators together. Their power on the Appropriations Committee made it necessary for department chiefs to conclitate them. Allison is regarded as the "smoothest" man in the Senate. He never antagonizes any one if he can avoid it. He does his work quietly and is a great hand at conciliation and combination. He twice declined the Secretaryship of the Treasury; tendered to him by Harrison and McKinley. The late John A. Logan left on record perhaps the best description of Allison. "Black Jack" was showing a constituent from Illinois through the Capitol building. Near the Senate end he nudged his friend. "You see that man walking along there with his hands behind his back. Well, he can walk over these tiles in hob-nailed shoes and make no more noise than a Maltese cat crossing a rug. His name is Allison, and he's from Iowa."

nite courtesy.

Senators from the same State are more apt, as a general rule, to be disagreeable to each other than friendly. Sometimes the Senators from the same State are not on speaking terms. This is the case with the Louisiana and New Hampshire Senators at present. White and Perkins of California were always excellent friends. Jones and Berry of Arkansas are warm friends, the Missouri Senators regard each other well, and Morgan and Pettus of Alabama have been friends and law partners for a third of a century.

STILL TOUTING FOR BURNS. Pounded and Punctured.

[San Francisco Chronicle, Sept. 1:]
The Burns touts are trying to spread the idea that the national Republican policy will go to pieces in Congress next winter unless it can have the help of both Senatorial votes from California. They have passed the word to their editors and other advocates, and notes of alarm are being raised in to their editors and other advocates and notes of alarm are being raised in every railroad pocket-borough between siskiyou and San Diego. Men who followed the tattered plume of Howard Wright in the last Legislature and all the political hangers-on of Herrin and Burns have suddenly grown solicitous lest, for want of one more Republican in the Senate, McKinley will have to drop the expansion issue and pass the rest of his term in ignoble subserviency to the Bryanites. "Rescue the party!" they shout: "save it by giving the President the aid of a full Senatorial representation from this State."

There could be no more misleading battle cry. The Republican party has a strong working majority in Congress, particularly in the upper house, and would have it if California were not represented there by a single Senator. The margin in the House is altxeen: that in the Senate, even if the Legislatures of California, Delaware and Pennsylvania, all Republicans can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and not a full hand and notes of alarm are being raised in Republicans can be counted on the fin-gers of one hand, and not a full hand at that. So it is clear that one Senator more or less will make no difference to at that. So it is clear that one senator more or less will make no difference to expansion.

Even if the margin were so narrow as to be perilous it would not follow that Dan Burns ought to go to the Senate. What are Burns's views about expansion, the Nicaragua Canal and the other great policies of the administration, He has none of his own, and it may be doubted that he is capable of having any. What views he professes are those of his political owner and preceptor, the Southern Pacific Railroad. The State knows where that corporation stands on the issue of the Nicaragua Canal, but it does not know how it regards the acquisition of distant territory. It is remembered that railroad men like Congressman Loud voted against the bill to annex Hawaii. What might not happen with such a man as Burns if Mr. Huntington should make up his mind that his interests would be averse to the acquisition of an Pacific islands, which, for naval and commercial purposes, interests would be averse to the acquisition of any Pacific islands, which, for naval and commercial purposes, might require the Nicaragua short-cut? Where would the voice of Dan Burns, Mr. Huntington's most obedient, sound then? On which side would his railroad proxy be cast?

There is still another party aspect to be considered. Even if the vote of a Dan Burns were sure for expansion and were needed, the Republican party would need more the vote of California in the Presidential contest of 1900. In practical politics a surplus vote for expansion cuts but a small figure beside California's adhesion to the President. Not even McKinley's personal prestige, not even prosperity or expansion which would follow the election of Burns to the Senate. The party would go to pieces then and there. The best it could do would be to sweep itself aside and give the field to the Democracy. We do not believe that, ir, face of such a danger, the administration, far from seeking "safety" from Burns, will do aught but discourage any attempt to put him in the California vacancy.

That vacancy, as we say, does no cancy.

That vacancy, as we say, does no harm. It can wait. The people of Cali fornia are not afraid of it and they de fornia are not afraid of it and they demand a chance to fill it in their own fashion in a Legislature whose Republican members shall be chosen on the Burns issue. If Burns can stand that test, well and good—no one will begrudge him what the people, of their untrammeled choice, may give. But it is most significant of how Burns realizes the odium which surrounds his name that he is turning every way but that in his quest of an honor which the Legislature has once refused to give him, and could only be induced to grant in extra session through the ingrant in extra session through the in-fluence of railroad bribes.

The first part of the evening's entertainment was held in Fraternity Hall, where, after call to order by President M. T. Herzog, and the singing of the opening ode by the audience, the President delivered an address of welcome which was responded to by Robert Robyne of San Diego. Little Helen Ginther sang and the Fremont Quartette, composed of W. B. Doxey, G. E. Wise, T. M. Irving and W. W. Knighten, rendered "While Dancing in the Moonlight" and a medley. An address was delivered by Rev. Will A. Knighten, abounding in figures relating to the history of the order in California, from which it was gleaned that there are now in California 352 subordinate lodges, and during the fifty years of its existence in the State it has paid for the relief of members the snug sum of 45,189,288.28. There are in addition ninety-one encampments of the Patriarchs Militant, which have expended $1,18,200, and 223 Rebekah lodges, that have expended $51,000. The order is the owner of 200 halls in the State, worth an aggregate of $2,125,500.

At the conclusion of the feast with President Herzog officiating as to astmaster, a number of speeches were made. "Patriarchal Odd Fellowship, Faith, Hope and Charity," was responded to by Past Grand Patriarch Judge D. L. Murdock of San Diego. In responding to "The Grand Lodge," Grand Master W. A. Bonynge gave some interesting items regarding the early history and growth of the order in California. In 1847, a call issued for a meeting of all Odd Fellows in California to meet in San Francisco, was responded to by twelve members of the order, and these members heat meetings until they left for the gold fields in 1848. In 1849, by a quspensation from Philadelphia the first regularly-constituted lodge known as California, No. 1, was instituted in San Francisco, September 9, and is still in existence. Sacramento, Stockton and other places followed, when in 1853 steps were taken for the organization of a Grand Lodge, which was effected on May 17. S. H. IMPROVED HIS MACHINE. funnel Work to Proceed Night and Contractor Chaffey, who is in charge f the work of making the excavations for the Third-street tunnel, has almost completely reconstructed his tunnel-ing machine, so that he does not expect a repetition of the frequent breaks that have heretofore somewhat delayed the work. The machine is of a new de-sign, and no such contrivance has been sign, and no such contrivance has been used in any such work anywhere clase in the country. When the machine was first placed on the work it was found that the frame was not strong enough to withstand the strain upon it, and in bending in places it caused the breaking of some of the cogs in the gearing. This fault has been remedied, and last night the newly-constructed machine was placed at work. In the first hour it had dug out five feet and will make that speed almost every hour night or day. Chaffey has two gangs of men at work on the machine, and it will be kept in position continuously twenty-

pleted. From the westerly end of the tunnel nearly 100 feet have been exca-vated, and on the easterly end there are two drifts of considerable depth.

don't get, not to mention the little difficulty of selecting a site for Carnegle's gift, the versatile and uninteresting press of San Diego is, just now, walking on air. Only that it is widely known that the author of "Col. Mulberry Sellers" is in "Yurrupp," one would be led to believe, from the dominant wind-currents on specula-tive improbabilities, so painfully ob-trusive, that that gentleman was space-writing for the press in the City of Grief.

Year after year, the annual exodus of young men and women from the cities and towns of Southern California emphasizes the need of a great educational institution in this half of the State. There are not wanting those who assert that a university could be founded and supported here, but for the lack of united effort, at-tributable principally to sectarian prejudices. If this be true, how great is the need for united effort. Pasa-dena alone witnesses an annual outgoing, (which, added to those who leave Los Angeles, would be suffi-cient to constitute a respectable at-tendance in numbers for any college. Is it not in order to sink differences of all sorts and unite on a Southern California university?

The offer of 181/2 cents per hour to men to go into the mountains to fight fire-may be night and day, on poor r short food and sleep—suggests that first-class law is rendered inoperative by those who most desire its efficiency. No active, trustworthy man will work for such a pittance, and endure the exposure and chances of physical harm. Tramps may be sesmall stipend. It requires good men to successfully battle with forest to successfully battle with lorest fires, and good men ought to have better pay than that above quoted. Just here, is the likely cause of the disastrous spread of the recent and present conflagrations.

Every good man's hand is, and should be, against the dog-poisoner, Many of our Coast exchanges tell of his cowardly work. No decent community will tolerate him if he is known. But, as he, most always, is not known, and is not likely to be, would it not be the part of wisdom would it not be the part of wisdom to placate him, where it can be done? There are men to whom the dual Commandment reads: "Love God and your dog," and who completely ignore their fellow-man. A dog that by its yelping at midnight, or snarling at passers-by in daytime arouses fiendish tempers in law-abiding peo-ple, is very apt to be poisoned. The fiend who poisons a dog for the lust of killing is not as noble as his innocent

At San Francisco, on Thursday evening last, a report was read be-fore the executive council of the Finance Committee of the recent soldiers' reception, in which it appears that $63,864.87 were collected, and that after all expenses of the wonderful telebration were paid a surplus of $40,000 remains to be used where it will do the most good to the returned nen. It is also stated that all channels of trade have been canvassed to find employment for these men. It is promised that no line will be drawn to cut off men from south of Tehach-api; that all that is done for men resident in San Francisco will cheerfully be done also for men resident in the south. The Red Cross will probably be the final almoners of the people's

The allowance for Echo Park does not meet with favor, because it is admittedly the purpose of the park department not to com-plete the improvement of this park, but to use part of the money for an-other purpose. The objections to the appropriation for storm drains, which amounts to more than $5000, is based on the fact that with this sum it will be possible to do only a small part of the work that is desired, while other parts of the city would have to wait a more favorable time for the improvements which they also need. The Council will be informed of the particulars of the proposed license ordinance on Tuesday and among other things which will be claimed for it will be that it will make the appointment ten additional policemen possible January 1. This expectation is sed upon the belief that the new asure will yield at least $5000 more in will be needed by the street de-

Although the apportionment of funds the several departments of the city has been practically decided upon by the Finance Committee and several other members of the City Council, it is by no means certain that when the report of that committee is made to the Council on Tuesday it will be adopted without opposition. By some of the members of the Council some of the allowances provided for in the committee's report are not approved, and it is possible that a demand will be made either for a full explanation or a change. The two items in particular to which objection is made are the allowances made for the improvement of Echo Park, and for the construction of storm drains in the First, Second and Ninth wards.

The improvement of Echo Park has been a pet scheme with the residents of that part of the city for many months, and while none of the niembers of the Council contend that the improvement is not needed, or that it is undesirable they express the view of the construction is undesirable they express the view of the construction of the city for many months, and while none of the niembers of the Council contend that the improvement is not needed, or that it is undesirable they express the view of the construction is undesirable they express the view of the construction of the city for many months. to the several departments of the city of that part of the city for many months, and while none of the riembers of the Council contend that the improvement is not needed, or that it is undesirable, they express the opinion that in the present financial straits of the city the money could well be used for some more important and necessary improvement. The plans toward which the money appropriated will be only a start, are quite elaborate. They include the construction of a wide boulevard from the western end of the Third-street tunnel to and beyond Echo Park, and the purchase of two pieces of property adjoining the park so as to enlarge it. The people in that district propose to pay a portion of the expenses, but the city is called upon to make the beginning. The department estimate for this park was $2500, but this was increased by the committee to $4400. When the objections to this expenditure were made known to the park department, it was admitted that that department did not expect to use the money for the purpose mentioned, but would later transfer it to some other use in that department. The amount appropriated or apportioned would not be sufficient to complete the work intended, and if it were used on other parks it would be just that much more to be devoted to the general department.

The allowance for storm drains, to which objection has also been made, is divided among three wards. The First Ward is to receive $1500, the Second $11975, and the Ninth $2900. In making these allowances the Finance Gommittee did so only because of the importunities of certain members of the Council. One of the Councilmen said yesterday that he did not consider it fair to the other parts of the city to expend this money in such a manner when the city is so much in need of cash. "Any person knows who knows anything about storm drains that such appropriations will not be a drop in the bucket in completing the construction of the storm drains demanded by these other Councilmen," said he. The several amounts would only be a beginning, and we shall have to provide other money to complete the work when once we expend this money for this purpose. That the finances of the city are in a most depierable condition, owing to extraordinary and unlooked for expense is admitted by all the members of the Council, and they are not at all to blame for such a condition, but to spend $3475 for such a purpose when to complete the work would require ten times that amount is like putting the money into a rat hole. This idea of spending money here and there fust because it will enable some. Councilman to point to what he has secured for his constituents and thereby please them at the expense of other parts of the city is not right. If there were more money available it would not make so much difference. That $3400 would pay the salaries of five new policemen for the whole year, and everybody knows that we need the policemen more than any ward needs an uncompleted storm drain."

In the report of the Finance Committee to the Council Tuesday the proposition to levy a vehicle license will be fully explained. One of the possibilities of this measure which will be argued is that by its enforcement it will not only enable an extension of the territory over which the streets are swept by hand, but it may make it possible to appoint the ten additional policemen by January 1. For this latter purpose only $5000 would be required from that date until the end of the fiscal year, and if the proposed ordinance is strictly enforced, it is expected that it will yield at least that amount in addition to what the street department will need.

LAST DAY OF GRACE.

LAST DAY OF GRACE.

With Bells Tomorrow

This is the last day that bicycles, velocipedes, tricycles and other riding velocipedes, tricycles and other riding machines, including automobiles, can be used on the streets of Los Angeles without their being equipped with a gong, bell or whistle, unless the rider thereof desires to subject himself to arrest and prosecution for violating the new ordinance. That ordinance was passed by the Council late in July, and was approved by the Mayor August 3; on the following day it was officially published, and with that publication all of the provisions of the ordinance except that requiring bells or whistles, went into effect. Thirty days were allowed the wheelmen and others in which to secure the bells or whistles provided for in the ordinance, and that time limit expires today. No effort will be made to enforce the law today, but beginning tomorrow the police will be expected to do their duty with reference to the ordinance. Much was expected of the new-ordinance in the way of preventing scorching, and while there have been a number of arrests, the measure has not had much effect except to enrich the dealers who sell bells. nachines, including automobiles,

SCHOOL BONDS.

Ordinance Ordering Their Issuan to Be Presented.

City Attorney will present to the City Council Tuesday an ordinance providing for the issuing of bonds of the city, as voted for, in the amount of $200,000, for the acquisition of lands and the construction of school build-ings other than a high school, and for school purposes, and the equipment of the buildings.

This ordinance was ordered prepared before the filing of the suit to test the legality of the recent annexation of additional territory to the city, and as the legality of the bond issue may be questioned in event that the city loses that suit, it is probable that the bonds will not be placed upon the market until the case is decided. The adoption of the ordinance will not mean that the bonds will be issued at once, but it will place the matter in such shape that they can be issued and sold whenever the City Council so desires. This ordinance was ordered pre Deficits Steadily Increasing-No Cash Before October.

The weekly report of the City Au-ditor, completed yesterday, showing the condition of the city funds, indicates that the deficits that have been placed opposite the more important of the standing funds, are steadily growing, and that there is little prosgrowing, and that there is little pros-pect of their being offset by receivts of cash until the payments of the first installment of city taxes begin to come in. That will not be before October, and will continue until late in November Meantime there is October, and will continue until late in November. Meantime, there is no possibility of paying the bills of the city in cash, and the City Treasurer will have to continue registering the demands that may be filed with him. Of course, there will be certain receipts in the mean time, but most of these will be consumed in the payment of warrants that have been registered for weeks. Long before the payments of taxes beglin the salary account will have been depleted, and the city employes will have to either sell-their warrants or discount them with claim-shavers.

This condition does not indicate that the city is at all insolvent, for there sell-their warrants or discount them with claim-shavers.

This condition does not indicate that the city is at all insolvent, for there are various amounts to the credit of the other funds, over which the Council exercises no other control than to see that the proper allotments are made. It means that the wogking funds are depleted on account of the shortage in last year's accounts and because there has not been sufficient time to replenish the funds from taxes. The balance of cash in the control of the City Treasurer yesterday amounted to $199.622.68, the lowest amount that has been in his hands for many months. The receipts of the city from all sources during the past week were $12.292.65, and the dispursements, $20.364.48. Those of the principal funds, which show a deficit, are: Cash, $29.303; fire department, $16.215.63; library, $1092.11; general park, $786.66; East Los Angeles Park, $133.73; park in ursery, $266.33; street lighting, $29.92. The funds which have a credit of cash, bond funds not included, are: Salary, $2582.67; common schools, $91.85; new water, $1678.74; outfall sewer, $1433.60; general šewer, $303.04; redemption, $1114.13; boller permit. $89.95; dog license fund, $460; police pension, $4160.50.

No Work Tomorrow.

Labor day being a legal holiday, all if the offices in the City Hall will be of the offices in the City Hall will be closed tomorrow. The men employed outside in the various departments will also have a day off. The public library will be open from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m., but no books will be exchanged, only the reading and reference rooms being open. The regular meeting of the City Council will be held on Tuesday.

New Bids Called For.

At the next meeting of the City Council an ordinance will be presented providing for the rejection of all bids for the improvement of Wilshire Boulevard between Benton Boulevard and Vermont avenue. The bids heretofore recived were not satisfactory to the All Ordinances Approved. All Ordinances Approved.

Acting Mayor Silver yesterday officially approved all of the ordinances adopted by the City Council since August 21. Among them were a large number of street ordinances and the amendment to the ordinances and the amendment to the ordinance regulating the business of moving houses in this city. These ordinances had been left unsigned by Mayor Eaton, and yesterday was the last day on which the executive's signature could be affixed.

At the request of the members of the Finance Committee City Attorney Haas has prepared the ordinance fixing the tax levy for the current fiscal year. This ordinance will be presented at the meeting of the Council Tuesday. The levy will be the same as announced some time ago, viz., $1.47 in the old city; $1.25 in the portions annexed in 1896, and $1.22 in Garvanza and the University districts.

Wants a Vacation.

The City Attorney will ask the City Council to grant him a vacation of two weeks beginning September 7. Nearly ill the heads of departments have had acations this year, and there is no loubt that the Council will grant his Edward W. Forgy, receiver for Fixed & Co., has begun suit against the Chapin-Tibbot Commercial Company and others for judgment, declaring the transfer of a stock of merchandise by Fixen & Co. to the Chapin-Tibbot Commercial Company, and by the latter to S. Goodenow, and by him to the Goodenow. now-Sheldon-Fixen Company to be null and void. It is also asked that null and void. It is also assed that a receiver be appointed and that an injunction issue restraining defendants from incumbering or disposing of any of the property and that an accounting between all parties interested be ordered.

On August 14, 1899, Fixen & Co. went into involuntary bankruptcy. The firm for many years had carried on extensive merchandise business in this city, having accumulated a stock, including fixtures, valued at $60,000. In May, it is alleged, E. C. Chapin, J. W. Tibbot, E. D. Morton, J. W. McCracken, Sylvester Goodenow, F. N. Gibbs, W. M. Sheldon and M. N. Sheldon, all of whom are defendants in the suit just instituteu, conspired together to swindle Fixen & Co., their creditors and all successors in interest, out of the $60,000 stock of merchandise, to which end, it is alleged, the defendants last named solicited Fixen & Co. to join them in a scheme to organize a large department store in Los Angeles, proposing to incorporate with a capital stock of $350,000, of which half would be paid in cash by the alleged "schemers" and half in unincumbered improved real estate. Fixen & Co. were then, it is alleged, further solicited to transfer its stock of merchandise to the proposed corporation and accept in payment therefor $10,000 in cash, which would be paid by the alleged "schemers," also notes of the proposed corporation. Many things are then said to have been done to induce the plaintiff to go into the scheme, all of which, it is alleged, were untrue and deceptive, and done for the purpose of fraud. Prominent men's names were used, it is alleged, and other schemes worked to gain the confidence of Fixen & Co. They finally were persuaded and transferred their stock to the proposed company. After the transfer of the merchandise was made by Fixen & Co., however, it was found upon thorough examination, it is alleged that the company was never incorporated as has been represented it would be, nothing having ever been done toward organization except to file articles of incorporation, that the company was never incorporated as has been represented it would be, nothing having ever been done toward organization except to file articles of incorporation, that the company was never incorporated as has been represented it would be, account, they claim they have always been unsuccessful.

The receiver then alleges that Fixen & Co. at the time they transferred their stock and good will were in debt $55,000 and upward. But as soon as the new company got hold of the stock they slaughtered it unmerifully, it is claimed, by cutting prices down to almost nothing, in order to meet their obligations. It is also alleged that scarcely any money was ever paid into the new treasury.

OLD SALTS AT WAR.

San Pedro Pitted Against Redonde in a Fisherman's Fight.

in a Fisherman's Fight.

The fishermen of San Pedro and those of Redondo are at outs. War has been declared. And it is all on account of the fish. Several days ago John Vidovich, a San Pedro Slav, came to the conclusion that all the ocean's finny tribe had gone to Redondo; he had been casting his net for days without results or fish, and he soon thought he must go else-where or fishless.

He went to Redondo. Here the where or ishless.

He went to Redondo. Here the prospect seemed very promising and he considered it well worth while to put out a net, said to be worth $200 at day to him. When he returned from San Pedro the following morning, his net was gone—nowhere to be seen nor found. He spent the greater part of the day searching for it on land, and finally, after every other effort had failed, found his valuable net calmly lying on the bottom of the sea. Its moorings had been cut. Vidovich's wrath was like the howling of a mighty tempest. "Some enemy has done this," complained the angry sea-dog.

He then gathered up the ill-treated net of heavy value, and went home, the name of his "enemy" rankling in his inflamed mind. The law should be invoked.

Vidovich called on Deputy District Attorney Wills yesterday morning and swore to a complaint, charging Hans Carstensen of Redondo with malicious imischief. The San Pedro sait says that he is very certain that Carstensen, who is a Swede, is the one who "did him dirt," and he wants him brought to a speedy justice. The complaint has been filed in the Township Court. Meanwhile the Slav casts his nets in the friendly, but fishless, waters of the government-chosen San Pedro.

NO LONGER PLAIN JIM.

Americanized Fook Has His Trial

Americanized Fook Has His Trial for Assault Reset.

The familiar physiognomy of the Americanized Chinaman, Jim Wong Fook, was seen once more in Department One yesterday. In fact, Fook has so completely dropped into American ways and boots and high collars that he is no longer Jim, but James, and so he signs himself. Fook's mission to the courtroom yesterday was to get a continuance of his trial, set for September 21, until some time in December. Fook's alleged crime is criminal assault committed upon a girl named Julietta Roberts, a little Canadian lassie who is now enger to marry her celestial friend; but the law will not permit him to get a license. His trial is reset to enable Julietta's foster mother to go back to Montreal for a deposition, which, it is claimed, will prove conclusively that the girl is over 17 years old, instead of only 15, as some believe and so testified at the preliminary examination. Before the Roberts girl came to California she was at school in a Montreal convent, and the records of the institution are said to contain correct data as to her birth. Superlative time is asked on the ground that a religious institution is slow and unwilling to disclose any record information.

An Explanatory

AN EXPLANATORY NOTE.

She Had Been "Married Three Times and Buried Them All." It was amusing, but 'neath it all was an undertone of pathos. Isaac Nicholas, an old man of Artesia, went to the County Clerk's office yesterday and in timid accents asked for a marriage license. He said he wanted to marry Mrs. Sarah Jane Porter of Long arry Mrs. Sarah Jane Porter of Long Beach, whose string of summers bounts sixty-seven. The old man's tympanum is not as vibrative as it used to be, and it is only with great diffi-to be, and it is only with a culty that he can hear.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked "Cupid" Kutz.
Nicholas was so deaf that he could scarcely understand, but finally he said with something of disgust, "Yes; two or three times."
"Has Mrs. Porter?" continued the querulous official.

The old man had guessed evidently what was coming, and down into a deep pantaloons pocket he dived for a deep pantaions plocker it depended to paper.

"That will tell you all," he piped.
The writing was by a woman's hand, "which having writ moved, on." The memoranda read: "Isaac Nicholas, 79, Artesia; Mrs. Sarah Jane Porter, 67.
Long Beach—married three times and buried them all."

The license was issued. "Do I keep this or you?" asked the timid old man, notwithstanding the fact that he had been through the mill three times before.

fore. He took the big envelope, but seemed reluctant to go. There was something on his mind. "It's been a bit lonely with me for a long time," he finally confided to "Cupid." "I need a partner, and I always did enjoy havin' a piece of calico about."

NO BAIL FOR BIRD.

District Attorney Given Time to Amend Bill of Exceptions.

A. Bird, who was sentenced eek ago yesterday to six years in Sar

R. A. Bird, who was sentenced a Quentin for forgery, was arraigned in Department One before Judge Campbell of San Bernardino yesterday. The main reason for his arraignment was that he might be admitted to bail. But his hopes of obtaining this privilege have been in vain. As soon as court was in session. Bird's attorney, H. C. Dillon, Esq., made a motion for bail, stating that he thought the peculiar circumstances in the case would certainly warrant the privilege, but Judge Campbell promptly denied the motion.

The next matter for consideration was the settlement of the bill of exceptions made at Bird's fourth trial. As filed by Bird's attorney they consist of fifteen volumes. The defense is very eager to get Bird's case reviewed during the October sessions of the Supreme Court, and Mr. Dillon has urged every reason imaginable to spur the District Attorney to prepare his amended bill with all alacrity. But Deputy McComas, who has prosecuted all the cases against Bird, is so busily at work on the exceptions in the Harry F. Clark murder trial that he asked for twenty days in the Bird matter. The settling of the bill of exceptions was therefore set for Saturday, the 23d inst.

Miscellaneous Legal and Other Items.

KNOT UNTIED. Josie Alien was granted a divorce by Judge Fitzgerald yesterday from Edward Alien, on the grounds of drunken cruelty and failure to provide. Mrs. Alien testified that when she married her husband she thought him a sober, industrious man, but about three weeks after the wedding he came home intoxicated. When asked the reason he told her that he felt good over receiving a picture of his brother.

PENSIONERS' DAY. Pensioners drawing quarterly pensions through the agencies at Augusta, Boston, Columbus, Detroit, San Francisco and Washington, will execute their vouchers at the County Clerk's office Tuesday, September 5, instead of Monday, which is a legal holiday. It is estimated that some 700 will visit the Courthouse for pension purposes on Tuesday.

TO RECOVER. G. G. Hughes is suing Amelia Elliott and her husband to recover $300 alleged to be due on an unsecured promissory note.

WANTS TO MORTGAGE. The Or-chard-avenue Baptist Church has filed as application to mortgage its prop-erty in the Waverly tract to meet an obligation of $3000.

FOR FORECLOSURE. Baroness Catherine Rogniat of Paris, France, has begun suit against Emil Otto Louis Wannack and others to recover $10,000 alleged to be due on a promissory note executed August 3, 1895, at 7½ per cent, and secured by a mortgage on property located at Downey avenue and Pritchard street.

BATTERY GOOD ENOUGH. Waiter Duncan called on Deputy District At-torney Willis yesterday asking to swear to a complaint charging Charles Bittrof. a dairyman on Moneta ave-nue, with assault with a deadly weapon. nue, with assault with a deadly weapon. Duncan said that he stood in the street watching his assailant milk his cows Friday night, when suddenly Bittrof made a dive for him, striking him in the face. In his hand, it is alleged, was a knife, which just grazed Duncan's cheek. The District Attorney thought, however, that battery was a good enough charge, and such a complaint was accordingly filed in the Police Court. Bittrof claims to have been "eternally pestered" by Duncan, who is always hanging around his place, he says, ready to steal his chickens.

ATTACHED. An attachment of levied upon the saloon property of Murphy at Redondo yesterday to cover a county license tax of $65.

atively simple matter to back-fire in the stubble and put an end to the blaze then and there. Nothing of the kind was done, however, as the few men on the patrol professed to have orders against using any such means. Once across the fields of stubble, the flames found new food in the dense underbrush on the sides of the Cucamonga Cañon and in a very few minutes the last chance to stop the flames had passed.

Omegala Accused of Ignoranity Neglecting the Only Means Which Could Have Stayed the Fierce Flames in Time.

One of the fiercest fires that has visited the southern section of the State for years is now in progress in the Sierra Madre Monutains, southeast of Old Baldy. The flames have been licking up the verdure in the forest reserve during the entire week, and it is now feared that the fire will spread to Lytle Creek and the Cajon Pass, in which case much damage would result to the Bear Valley irrigation plant, and to the other sources of supply which provide the towns to the southward with water.

The fire is still burning in the reserve, but owing to the inaccessibility of the mountains where it now is, nothing can be done, say the forest authorities, to stop the devastation. It is thought the flames will not the least chance to stop the flames had based on weather sticks and twigs as if they were chaff. Wedfiesday morning the fire was well on its way to the Cucamonga Cañon with a terrific roar. Nothing could stand in its way. Grass, brush and trees, all nearly as dry as tinder from the long dry season in the mountains, were swallowed up in the greedy grasp. The rule of the mountains were stated to sould be seen for many miles.

Some effort was made to stop the fire reserve fifteen men at Stoddard's camp. They worked trying to stamp out the fire all day Monday and well into the night. Insomnia

Did you ever have that feeling of oppression, like a weight on your chest, or a load of cobble-stones in your stomach, keeping you awake nights with a horrible sensation of anxiety, or tossing restlessly in terrible dreams, that make the cold perspiration break out all over you? That's insomnia, or sleeplessness, and some unfortunates suffer with it night after night, until their reason is in danger and they are on the edge of going mad. The cause of this fearful ailment is in the stomach and bowels, and a Cascaret taken at night will soon bring relief and give the sufferer sweet, refreshing sleep. Always insist on getting CASCARETS!

CASCARETS are absolutely harmless, a purely vegetable compound. No mercurial or other mineral pill-poison in Cascarets. Cascarets promptly, effectively and permanently cure every disorder of the Stomach, Liver and Intestines. They not only cure constipation, but correct any and every form of irregularity of the bowels, including diarrhon and dysentery. Picasant, palatable, potent. Taste good, do good. Never sicken, weaken or gripe. Be sure you get the genuine! Beware of imitations and substitutes! Buy a box of CASCARETS to-day, and if not pleased in every respect, get your money back! Write us for booklet and free sample! Address STERLING REMEDY COMPANY, CHICAGO or NEW YORK.

LOCAL CLEARANCES. The expreceding week, and $1,878,156.65 for the week before that. For the corresponding week in1898 the figures were $1,183.-11,180. The increase for the week is over 40 per cent.

For the month of August the exchanges were $7,621,729.32, compared with $5,360,663.53 for the month in 1898, as increase of close to 40 per cent.

NATIONAL CLEARANCES. Last week the exchanges brought to fiftyfive odd clearinghouses in all the principal cities in the United States amounted to $1.45.564.83°, compared with $1,522,812,618 in the previous week, and $1.514,135,613 in the week before that. Compared with the corresponding week last year there was a gain equal to 13.9 per cent.

There is a very marked falling off in the exchanges during the month just closed, as compared with the other months of the current year. Still when one recalls the fact that $1888 made a record that was remarkable over all preceding years, and that 1899 is still at its worst 20 per cent. better than its great predecessor, the record is good. A check in speculation is where most of the falling off is found. New York banks are away below the general average this week.

THE BUYER'S VIEW OF WHEAT.

Summarising the wheat outlook abroad, the London Statist says that European importing countries will require a minificum quantity of 43,000,000 quarters, wherets last season 38,000,000 quarters, wherets last season 38,000,000 quarters, whore would probably have sufficed, although, as a matter of fact, considerably more than this has been imported, the stocks and reserves being in consequence increased. Seeing how deficient, the supplies from Russia and Roumania are likely to be, it is difficult to believe that the countries outside America will be able to supply 20,000,000 quarters to be obtained from the United States, in addition to the 4,000,000 quarters which America every year has to find for extra European countries. In other words, America, with a crop estimated at 550,000,000 bushels, as compared with 700,000,000 bushels, as a crop of 550,000,000 bushels, leaves a surplus of only 150,000,000 bushels, and as a crop of 550,000,000 bushels, and as a crop of 550,000

PROSPECT IN BROOMS. Brooms have not been so high in years as at present. The high prices are quite likely to continue. The acreage in broom corn is no larger than last year, when the shortage was great, a corner was successfully made and prices put to three times their usual level.

OLEO AND BUTTER. At the East oleo is constantly becoming a greater competitor with butter. There are four-teen cleo factories in the country, which turn out 87,000,000 pounds of product in a year. In July, 1898, there were in Chicago 479 dealers who sold cleo at retail, and in July, 1899, there were $47. The Federal license is $48 per year. How the manufacture and use of cleo ingreases is shown in the following COMBINES. No subject at this time engages the attention of the business world more than that of trusts. It is creating anxiety in political as well as in business circles. To fight trusts successfully facts will have to be carefully comprehended. One fallacy is to suppose that the advance in prices in the last year are all, or nearly all, due to trusts. Taking values as they were November 1, 1898, and August 15, 1899, and taking 100 per cent, as the basis in November, the following table shows the vember, the following table shows the increases and where trusts affect the prices and where not

This market is about bare of old-crop raisins, probably the last car having been shipped. New crop will find a clear field when the gruit comes on the market.

The walnut crop promises all that could be expected in quality, but experts who have gone carefully over the whole field think the output will fall below 4000 tons.

Fresh fruits are all in active demand at good prices. Peaches, figs, grapes and Japanese plums of various kinds are in their prime. Bartlett pears are not by any means scarce yet, and apples are plentitul. In apples the range of prices is wide, from it per hox for common to fi.35 for carefully selected red kinds.

Hay is very firm, but not very active. Within the next few weeks supplies in interior points will begin to fall and then activity will prevail. tain prices and covering the realizing going on. The short interest in some of the industrials was sensitive to the upward movement, and was inclined to cover, helping the strength. The various professional maneuvers were the surafce indications of the culmination of the recent bull movement, and the market lapsed into duliness and neglect after they had been concluded. There was no heavy liquidation in evidence outside the speculative profit-taking, and the market took on the condition of sluggishness, which indicates the contentment of the mass of holders of securities and the unwillingness of buyers to raise their bids. This did not prevent the rise of railroad stocks here and there from individual causes. Earnings of railroads continue to show unprecedented results. But there is no change in the cautious and conservative policy heretofore shown by railway managers. They have continued to make extraordinary outlays for betterment, and in many instances are inclined to pile up a surplus against future contingencies, or to put the surplus earnings into permanent improvements designed to cheapen the cost of transportation. Present high prices of railroad stocks have thus anticipated increased dividend disburgement, which in many cases have not come. The persistent increase of railroad earnings makes the higher dividends increasingly probable. But the actual declaration has been in many cases more than discounted. The stocks of iron and sieel companies on the exchange very obstinately refuse to advance owing to a feeling that the present conditions in iron and steel are abnormal and necessarily transitory. Even the buoyant tone of one stock in this group elicited little response elsewhere.

The evidence of uneasiness, if not actually of distress in foreign financial centers, on account of the heavy bills they must pay to this country, are accepted by the bears as a symptom that easier money will be sought in future to satisfy their needs. So far as the immediate outlook is concerned, money conditions are favorab Tone in Money.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—The Financier says: "The statement of the New York clearing banks for the week ending September 2, shows, as had been antici-September 2, snows, as not been anticipated, a loss in surplus reserve due to operations with the treasury and the interior. The decrease in money held above legal requirements, aggregates about 25 per cent., and as there is no interior. The decrease in money held above legal requirements, aggregates about 25 per cent., and as there is no reason to expect a different statement for a week or two to come, the outlook favors a firmer tone in money. The banks have apparently reached a position where they cannot expand their business, and if the demand for money from the West and South attains considerable proportions, contractions in outstanding commitments are inevitable. The loans of the banks have been reduced steadily since the opening of July, the decrease up to the present having been forty millions. Deposits show a heavier falling off. The result of these contractions, however, as reflected in excess cash, is seen in an enlargement of reserve of only $5,000,000. These are the conditions under which the banks face a demand, the extent of which is in doubt as for money needed to move crops. Still, the outlook is not as dublous as might be inferred. The interior firstitutions are much stronger than at this time last year, and the decline of foreign exchange rates forecasts what may be expected if rates show a tendency to rise beyond a reasonable figure. At this time last year the reserves of the New York banks were only $5,000,000 higher than at present and fell to $4,250,000 on September 4, but a month later, owing largely to gold imports and treasury operations, the excess reserve had risen to about $30,000,000. The movement of money to the West this year will probably be much less than last, but in any event the method of recuperation then emplayed is easier of accomplishment now. The principal feature in the current statement, aside from the loss of $5,212,500 in cash, is the decrease of $5,212,500 in cash, is the decrease of $5,213,000 in cash, is the decrease of $5,213,000 in cash, is the decrease of $5,213,000 in cash, is the decrease of $6,212,000 in cash, is the decrease o

THE WEEK'S CHANGES. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—The weekly statement of the banks show the fol-lowing changes: Surplus reserve de-creased $3.187.275, loans decreased $3. creased $3,187,275, loans decreased $3,-126,900, specific decreased $4,255,300, legal-tender decreased, $985,400, depos-its decreased $8,341,300, circulation in-creased $228,400. The banks now hold $9,191,250 in excess of the legal re-quirements.

Autumn Merchandise Bids You Welcome.

The broad aisles of this great shopping place are as free to the sight-seeing public as the balmy air of nature's perpetual summer clime. The freedom and enjoyment of Southern Californian life is nowhere more manifest than here, in the shadow of the world's most beautiful and thoroughly satisfactory merchandise. New goods are smiling a welcome to those who appreciate "first views." The news of many new arrivals is published today. but the assortments are as yet only budding. The full bloom will come later, the magnificence of which will outsplendor and out-rank the supremacy of former achievements. Finer, better and more costly grades of merchandise will be plentiful, but in no instance will we depart from the habitual low prices which have marked every step of our development. You can buy any and every grade of goods here for less than is usually charged? for like qualities.

Elegance of the New Plaids.

The French school of art weaving is exhibited here in all its completeness and splendor. Plaids that in years gone by would have been considered extremely flashy are shown here in abundance. The more subdued kinds are also here in plenty. The color schemes so artistically wrought by the weaving together of brightly-hued yarns are sources of continual wonderment. The materials used are wool, camel's hair and silk. Many of the weaves are new, but old favorites in new effects are plentiful. Every style of design and cloth that might be wanted for golf cape, dress, dress skirt or children's dresses finds ample showing. The prices are 50c, 59c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, up to $4.00.

Advance Showing of Lace Curtains.

Daintiness combined with cheapness and elegance combined with money saving. The fall lines are partially shown this week for the first time. Splendid assortments of all kinds, from the cheapest to the highest grade. No middlemen derive profit because of the fact that we pay cash direct to the foreign curtain factories. The patterns are selected with great care as to their daintiness, durability and exclusiveness. Many novelties will get first showing. Our Drapery Room on the fourth floor is large, well lighted and artistically decorated with fresco, hangings and cozy corners. Many new ideas can be gathered there, but interest will center around the lace curtain display. Every price quoted is at least a quarter lower than is customary.

BOBINET CURTAINS. A plain body with ruffled sides and ends, lace edge; we have them in a great variety of other styles; the best cottage curtain $2.25 on the market for.

INGERSOLL'S CREED,

READER of The Times has sent to this paper the following article, known as "Ingersoll's Creed," accompanied by the remark that it is "good enough for anybody:"

"To love justice, to long for the right, to love mercy, to assist the weak, to forget wrongs and remember benefits, to love the truth, to be sincere, to utter honest words, to love liberty, to wage relentless war against slavery in all its form, to love wife and child and friend, to make a happy home, to love the beautiful in art, in nature; cultivate the mind, to be familiar with the mighty thoughts that genius has expressed, the noble deeds of all the world; to cultivate courage and cheerfulness, to make others happy, to fill life with the splendor of generous acts, the warmth of loving words; to discard error, to destroy prejudice, to receive new truths with gladness, to cultivate hope, to see the calm beyond the storm, the dawn beyond the night; to do the best that can be done and then be resigned; this is the religion of reason, the creed of science. This satisfies the brain and heart."

No one can successfully challenge the excellence of the injunctions in this enumeration of duties, nor deny that the world would be a hundredfold better were this "creed" universally observed by mankind. To love justice and mercy and truth, and wife and child and friend; to forget wrongs and remember benefits-these and every other moral quality mentioned are virtues of the highest order, of essential and unquestion able worth. And it is no doubt true that Col. Ingersoll exemplified his creed in his life to a greater degree than many Christians exemplify the faith which they profess. He loved his family and was kindly toward his friends; was honest in his dealings; did generous deeds. But when this has been said, when he has been given credit for good purposes, for honesty and for the generosity of his nature, his creed and his life have been summed up; and where in this summary has there been mentioned a duty or a deed that is not made imperative by the ethics of Christianity?

The moral duties recognized by the great "apostle of free thought" are simply some-only a portion-of the obligations, the fulfillment of which is universally recognized as essential to an exemplification of the Christian faith. Of course Ingersoll, being an agnostic, made no reference to duty toward a Supreme Being, confining himself to man's duty to man; but how much more simply, and at the same time how much more comprehensively, did Christ express those obligations! Instead of the tautological repetitions of Ingersoll's words, Christ summed all these duties up in the one brief sentence, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Given this quality of love and not only the love of justice, of right, of mercy and every other social virtue mentioned by Ingersoll, but many more follow of necessity as the whole includes all the parts.

Leaving out of consideration, therefore, man's duty to a Creator or a Savior, Ingersoll's "creed" is cumbrous and incomplete beyond measure when compared with the simple rule of life laid down by Jesus Christ or the government of the relations of man to man.

Much credit has been claimed for Col. Ingersoll for kindliness of disposition, and in his personal relations with friends this credit was deserved. Nevertheless, in discussing his favorite theme of the falsity of Christianity, he became simply brutal. Then his wonderful powers of ridicule, sarcasm and derision were used without mercy, and he trampled with evidences of delight on the sensibilities of those who held the beliefs taught by his own father and cherished by them with as much tenderness and reverence as the memory of their dead. Supposing Christianity to be nothing but a fancy and a fiction, what justification was there for such a course? Infidels have admitted that the ethics of Christianity is perfect. Certainly Ingersoll offered nothing better; nor did he offer any hope for the future. If the hope of Christianity for the future is a fancy, it at least affords a restingplace in this life, and it serves a purpose as a place of refuge for weary, if misguided, men and women. Why tear down the structure and wound and lacerate those within?

THE END SHALL BE PEACE

C UMMER seems to be something of an afterthought in Southern California this year. Our late August days are almost the first that have given us a hint of summer heat, and they have been tempered by cool breezes that have taken from them every bit of sultriness and discomfort. When man was driven out of Eden the Creator reserved for him as the nearest approach to it this glorious Sunland of the West where may grow every plant "that, is pleasant to the sight and good for food." Let us rejoice in it as the modern Eden of civilization's hopes and desires. If men cannot achieve things worthy of their manhood here, it is because the race has become so degenerate that it cannot progress along higher paths to nobler ambitions.

But we will not despair. There is to be a tomorrow for this nation that shall be worthy of Freedom, and some of the most fruitful seeds of that day's harvest will be sown right here in this mountain-guarded State where we live, and where our environment tends to the production of the best type of manhood. We are no longer on the frontier. Our outer lines have been pushed clear across the Pacific, and we stand midway between our borders with the promise of a wonderful future before us. Commerce will pave a broad highway for us to the Old World, and we shall be among the foremost heralds of enlightened freedom to our newly-acquired territories across the seas. Through the Golden Gate shall the Orient and the Occident clasp hands, and the universal brotherhood of the race be more fully acknowledged. Already the light of that Future is slowly dawning, and the end shall be peace.

SUNSET AT SANTA MONICA.

There was a dreaming goddess in the sea. Her floating hair made ripples on the deep; The whispering waves upon the beach did creep, And clung to the white sands lingeringly.

The sea had hushed its murmur and did lie The sea had nushed its murmur and du he As if its soul were passing while on high, Above its western rim the sun hung red, And golden beams upon the waters shed; The winds breathed not and passing time was told In the hushed silence of the coming eve: No leaf stirred, not a bird did weave A note of song; no insect's hum— The warm, still, quiet air was dumb.

The mounts grew rosy red, a flush The mounts grew roys red, a mean of crimson through the purple hush That wrapped them stole, transfigured the Like altars of the dying day, Gleamed with the glory of the light.

Night thrust her fingers through the grass, transfigured they, And long, lank shadows everywhere Fell on the meadows sleeping there.

But still like swift sword-thrusts did pass The golden sunbeams dropping still, Aslant the quiet levels fair, And on the summit of the hill.

Then to the waiting sapphire s Swept by his garment's golden trail, The sun sank low upon the brim Of quiet waters, on the rim Of the wide, opal-shining West, Of the wide, opal-shining West, Then closed the Sun his shining lid, And by the trembling wave was hid, And day was done, ELIZA A. OTIS.

AS EXEMPLIFIED BY PRISONERS AND WITNESSES IN LEGAL TRIALS.

[Chambers's Journal:] A simple prisoner was Patrick McNamara, recently indicted at the Limerick Assizes for stealing a sheep, the property of his landlord, Sir Garrett FitzMaurice. He pleaded that he found the animal straying on the road, and was simply driving her home. "Can you read?" asked the judge. "A little bit, me lord," was the reply. "Then you could not be ignorant that the sheep belonged to your landlord, Sir Garrett FitzMaurice, as his brand, 'G. F. M.,' was on her." "True enough, me lord," said the prisoner; "but sure, I thought the letters stood for 'Good Fat Mutton.'

The answers given by witnesses to counsel examining and cross-examining them are often very comical. In an assault case the prosecutor deposed that he was suddenly aroused from his slumbers by a blow on the head adminstered by the prisoner. "And how did you find yourself then?" asked the counsel. "Fast asleep,

In an assault case from his slumbers by a blow on the head adminstered by the prisoner. "And how did you find yourself then?" asked the counsel. "Fast asleep, sir," replied the witness.

An old pedagogue named O'Doherty of local celebrity in Donegal was a witness in a case. During his cross-examination, counsel said: "Where were you, sir, on this night?" "This night!" exolaimed O'Doherty. "Oh, but you're the larned gentleman! This night isn't come yet. I suppose you mane that night?" "Well, I suppose the schoolmaster was abroad that night doing nothing," continued the counsel. "What's nothing?" saked the witness. "What is it, yourself?" said the counsel. "I'll tell you thin," replied O'Doherty. "It's a footless stocking without a leg."

In a case tried before the late Baron Dowse, a refractory witness refused to answer a question put by country.

In a case tried before the late Baron Dowse, a refractory witness refused to answer a question put by counsel, and said, "If you axe me that question agin, I'll give you my shoe on your poll." "Does your lordship hear that language?" said the counsel, appealing to the judge. "The answer to my question is essential to my client's case. What does Your Lordship advise me to do?" "If you are resolved to repeat the question," said Baron Dowse, "I'd advise you to move a little farther from the witness."

The politeness of the Irish peasantry is proverbial. There was a ludicrous exemplification of it at the Roscommon Assizes recently at the trial of a man for robbery and assault. An old woman named Mrs. Cosgrave was the prosecutrix. On being asked if she saw in courit the man who had assaulted and robbed her, she turned around, and, pointing to the prisoner in the dock, said, most politely, "There's the very gintleman, yer honor."

DESTROYING MONEY.

[Youth's Companion:] Extraordinary precautions are taken by the United States government in the destruction of its wornout and filthy paper money. The fact that this could be used again makes it necessary that its destruction should be conducted with care, and be made complete.

All the paper money that passes through the treasury is sorted, and the old bills are sent to the redemption division, where they are searched for possible counterfeits. Then they are carefully counted, and tied up into bundles of 100 notes each.

A great cancelling-machine then drives four holes through each of these bundles, of which a careful record is kept. The piles of bills are then cut into two parts, one set of halves going to the Secretary's office and the other to the Register's office.

In each place the halves are again counted, after which they are chopped by machinery into fragments. Not they are chopped by machinery into fragments, satisfied with this, the bits are then botted in vats of hot water and alkali until they are reduced to an unrecognizable pulp. This the law permits the treasury to sell to manufacturers of novelties, who make it into little models of the Capitol and the White House, which are sold as souvenirs in the Washington stores. New bills are issued in an amount equal to those destroyed.

Perhaps the only woman who has actually commanded a regiment of soldiers is the Princess Victoria Melita of Hesse, who is the colonel of the Third Hessian Life Guard Infantry, by the favor of her husband, the Grand Duke Ernest Louis of Hesse. The appointment of the Princess is by no means purely honorary. She knows all about tactics, and often leads her regiment in person in its evolution.

Viewing Things With Alarm. By Robt. J. Burdette.

HERE, oh, where has the young man gone
Who graduation clothes put on,
Sometime about the last of May,
And owned the whole world for a day?
And owned the whole world for a day?
Who chanted an sweet girl graduate.
Who chanted at the sweet girl graduate.
And started out with a giggling frown,
To turn the old world upside down?
And where is the last year's candidate
Who had things fixed for this year's slate?
Who carried around, if you'd believe,
A couple of counties up his sleeye?
And where is the scribe, with a vaunting will,
Who started a long-felt want to fill,
And courted she'gles and fair renown
With a minion sneet in a pica town?

The lad has divided the world up fair, and holds but his own eight-billionth share; The sweet girl grad is a sweet surprise and conquers fate with her hand-made pies; The candidate with the deathless gall Is fixing things for another fall; And the journalist with the haughty crest Is a lingering egg in last year's nest.

Somehow, there appears to be no small alarm felt here and there that the rising generation is being overeducated. Learned and thoughtful people "riew with alarm" the hothouse, forcing-room process of education among the younger children, and are calling a halt with an earnestness that is well nigh hysterical. I am not very deeply moved by these fears. My education in a newspaper office led me into a rather careless famillarity with annual "platforms," in which each party "viewed win alarm" something the other side was doing, but immediately and unwittingly applied a soothing sedative to the public pulse by "pointing with pride" to something that we had done, were still doing, and would do yet a great deal more if we only got in, or could be kept in. I have learned—and thus far, that grim old schoslmaster, Experience, in whose excellent training-school of grown-up children of all sexes, men, women and bachelor-maids, I am still an undergraduate, has not compelled me to unlearn diaed to the search of the company of the company hurt us. When Saturday came, and we turned ourselves loose over the town and the adjacent country, people sometimes—that is, once a week, wished that something might be done during school hours to sap a little of our exuberant vitality. If we had suffered during the week, it was merely from self-restraint, imposed from without. If there is anything languid, enervated, listless and nerve-weary about a herd of colts turned loose in a pasture, then we were nerve-fagged on Saturday. The fact is, we didn't know we had any nerves. I had an idea that they were not developed until after 50, in women, and never in men. Saturday night, we studied our Sunday-school lessons. Because in those days, no wise men studied them for us and printed the questions and answers on a lesson leaf that the teacher might read one while we read the other in the teacher might read one while we read the other in concert, and thus save time. Usually—that is every month in the year, there was a race on, in the Sunday-school for a prize of a Bible, to be given the pupil committing the most verses to memory. The race was not to the best boy, but to the fellow with the best and most retentive memory. I remember one boy—who was no better than he had to be—who could remember a chapter at a time if he tried. He used sometimes to commit verses to memory just to take up the time of the class in reciting them, and then, at the close of the contest, his sister always carried off the Bible by about two hundred and fifty verses over him. Did it break her down? She is at the head of a great religious sothe teacher might read one while we read the other in clety today, doing three women's work and keeping things going as reguler as a chronometer. We studied ciety today, doing three women's work and keeping things going as regular as a chronometer. We studied just as many hours as the children do today; studied just as hard; studied just as much at home, and with poorer helps and by poorer lamps and aggravating candles. This generation isn't a race of nervous wrecks, by any means. We have Joe Wheelers, Teddy Roosevelts, McKinleys, Tom Reeds, Mark Hannas, Andrew Carnegies, Mary Ellen Lease, Sarah Tyson Rorer, Belva Lockwood, Papa Pingree, among the types of today, grown out of the education of yesterday. Each one may have "a nerve" peculiar to the owner, but there isn't a ganglion of "nerves" in the entire combination. Our educational system may not be perfect, but it is better—better—immeasurably better than it ever has been.

The children learn so much more easily than we did. A little fellow sat at my table one day, home from a Quaker kindergarten. He said, "Popsie, what is a trapezoid?" Well, to gain a little time, I told him "it was "a pretty big word for such a rosy, little mouth." "Yes," he said, "but what is it?" So I told him as well as I could that it was an irregular figure, and explained to him what I meant by "irregular," so that I wouldn't have to tell him just how irregular it was. "Oh, well," said the little man, "never mind, I'll draw one for you, and then you can remember it better, Miss Comly says." And he drew one on his napkin with the handle of his fork; and to this day I can see that figure on the napkin, although I can't recall it as it appeared in Legendre. Must be in the teacher, eh?

So don't worry too much—which is, not at all—about kin, although I can't recall it as it appeared in Legendre. Must be in the teacher, eh?

So don't worry too much—which is, not at all—about the children in the schools today. They know so much more at 12 than we did at 15, that we think they must be rushing through under the forcing-room process. But if you visit a great many schools, especially the public schools, this impression wil fade away. Some things about modern teaching I don't understand, because I have been too slow, things have gone beyond me. A few years ago, I was paralyzed by a new system—new to me, I mean—of teaching reading. Saw it in some public schools in Iowa. Begin at the latter end of the sentence, gasp and cough phonetically back to the beginning, and then read the sentence off correctly. Didn't believe it could be done, until the teacher called up some children about 7 years old, and the little ones showed me how they did it. "But," I said, "the whole principle of the thing is as wrong as a cow in a garden. It's like loading a gun by putting in the bullet before you do the powder." That was a clincher. Two days after that I was at Fort Leavenworth, and watched some soldiers at target practice. And when they loaded their rifles, they simply broke the breech, and I hope to die if they didn't shove in the cartridge bullet first and powder last! And I thought of the Austrian musket I used at Corinth, and of the way I learned to read. There are some things with which I haven't kept up.

I vield to the superjority of the breech-loading rifle. which I haven't kept up.

I yield to the superiority of the breech-loading rifle without a protest, but—

I still want to go on record as maintaining that to read "mailliW kcurts nhoJ," is no way to read "John struck William." If William came at him in that fashion, I hope John struck him one that he would remember.

Well, I suppose that in some things I must be an old

Well, I suppose that in some things I must be an old fossil. I have, however, no desire to go to school again; but if I were given to wishing for things I can't have, which I am not, I would wish that modern systems of education had prevailed in the public schools when I was a boy. And I reckon that I am just as likely to get that blessing by wishing for it, as I am to get anything else by the same easy process.

I wonder, though, if any system ever pleased anybody who had to study under it? I wonder if there has ever been found anything like an easy road to learning? Seems to me I was reading in an Old Book the other day an article on this subject—and a well-written paper It was, too. "And further, by these, my son, be admonished; of making many books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh." The "weariness" comes to a man when he has studied the best text-books the best teachers of his day could place in his hands, and then has his son come home from college to tell him that all that he though he knew was rubbish that wasn't worth the burning, else had it been burned long before anybody now living was born. "So runs the world away." Let us be thankful that two and two makes—is—or—are—four. I hope to die if I know which.

SHOW YOURSELF FRIENDLY.

Show Yourself friendly, the strongest need friendship;
Treasures of heart-life, like plantlets unfold,
Drinking the sunshine, while hearts in the shadow
Shrink 'neath the darkness ungainly and cold;
Just as the plant must reach up for the sunlight,
Seeking the best that a kind heaven lends,
So for your efforts the best gifts are waiting,
Show yourself friendly if you would have friends.

Show yourself friendly in words true and kindly, Learn from nymph Echo who hideth away, Pining for love amid arches and hillsides,
Ever returning the words that you say;
Sighing, "I love you," when you talk of loving,
Giving each speaker the words that he senda,
Teaching forever in soft repetition,
Show yourself friendly if you would have friends.

Show yourself friendly in actions that ever Ring out more clearly than Echo can speak, Make of the desert the blossoming garden, Full of the sources of joy that we seek; Raise where the needy can find it a dwelling, Make it a home where love's sweet mujet tends, Gratefully sounding in happiest chorus, Show yourself friendly if you would have friends

Show yourself friendly, but let not the showing Meaningless be, a mere effort of art, Such show is worthless, for quickly must wither Friendliness springing less deep than the heart; There must it be in sincerity rooted, Having a life which by nature ascends Up to the sunshine of love, which revealeth,
Be in heart friendly, and you will have friends.

OOM PAUL'S STORY.

INTERVIEW WITH THE PRESIDENT OF THE TRANSVAAL.

By a Special Contributor.

CTEPHANUS JOHANNES PAULUS KRUGER, President of the Transvaal, is the most interesting public character today to interview. Upon being introduced you first conclude that he has been greatly over estimated. He seems nothing more than a shrewd old hunter, who, by constant contact with wild animals and savage Kaffirs, has developd a wariness that makes him suspicious of everything and everybody. He does not have the "penetrating eye" usually ascribed to great men. On the contrary, a puff of flesh underneath great men. On the contrary, a puff of flesh underneath his eyes, as a rule, permits one to see but a narrow gleam, giving one the impression of shiftiness.

His legs are so short and slender that you wonder how they bear the weight of a heavy, thick and solid body. His head is big, with nose and ears to match, and his neck concealed by beard, hair and cont collar, so that you cannot determine whether or not he indulges in neckwear. At home he is usually puffing a short briar pipe, and as he handles this you notice that the thumb of his left hand is missing. There is a story in connection with this that His Honor will tell you between puffs if he is in the mood. It gives an idea of the grit which is a characteristic of the old Boers.

Stories of Physical Courage.

Stories of Physical Courage.

Mr. Kruger, when a young man, was out hunting hart beeste one day with a rifle which had not been used for a long time. While tinkering with a charge the gun exploded, tearing his left thumb in charge Kruger's companions wanted to give up the hunt and hurry to the nearest surgeon, but the intrepid young Boer refused. Taking out his hunting-knife, he placed the lacerated thumb on the stock of the rifle, and amputated it himself. By tying about the stump a piece of a leopard. Young Kruger's only weapon was a jack-knife, but shielding his sister with one arm, he met the vicious spring of the leopard with the other, and after a bloody struggle succeeded in stabbing it to death.

One is hardly warranted either in speaking slight-ingly of "Oom" Paul's legs, for they once ran a race that made him famous all through the native tribes in South Africa. A Kaffir chief had become celebrated for his running ability, and had never been beaten until challenged by a number of young Boers, who chose Kruger to represent them. It was decided that the two should run for twelve hours, and the man leading at the end of that time was to have some sort of a prize. At the end of eleven hours the Kaffir dropped in his tracks unconscious, while Kruger kept on to the finish, and, according to one of his companions, was so fresh then that he took part in a hunting trip.

Paul's Piety.

Oem Paul's Piety.

It is the appearance of rough hardihood and unkempt personal attire that first impresses one on meeting "Oom" Paul, but when the man begins to talk and unfold gradually his mental power, you forget all else but Kruger the diplomat and careful statesman. He gave the writer a short interview recently for publication with the understanding that the Boer side should be represented from his own view-point, first inquiring if I were a spy from Cecil Rhodes. On being assured to the contrary by a number of Raad members who were present, he followed it up by another customary question, turning on me suddenly and asking: "What is your religion?"

These two inquiries give an insight into Kruger's life.

tion, turning on me suddenly and asking: "What is your religion?"

These two inquiries give an insight into Kruger's life. His first duty, he believes, is to God, and his second to Rhodes, whom he detests like a poisonous reptile. But for Rhodes, Mr. Kruger says, all would be peace and quietness in the Transvaal. So long as this man is in South Africa there is no rest for the Boers, and their secret service agents may be found on every street in Johannesburg, on the lookout for Uitlander conspiracies.

From all outward appearances, Oom Paul is intensely plous, and though the English insist that it is all hypocrisy, there is no proof that Kruger does not live in strict accordance to his preaching. He was confirmed in 1842 by the Rev. Daniel Lindlay, an American missionary, and from that day to this has led a rawhide he stopped the flow of blood, and winding around it his red handkerchief, he continued the sport. Physical robustness and courage have contributed greatly toward Kruger's success as the leader of a nation. He is absolutely fearless, though not reckless, and since boyhood has known how to act quickly in an emergency. Unlike other famous men little has been told of his personal history. None but the older generation of Boers know much about it, and they regard it as a sort of divine narrative that is not to be irreverently discussed.

All through his life Kruger has had narrow escapes from death, and his career, if detailed fully, would be thrilling. When only 14 years old, he and a little sister strayed away from the laager down in Cape Colony, where the elder Kruger had settled on emigrating from Germany, and while playing were suddenly attacked by severely Christian life, after the precepts laid down by John Calvin. He can quote nearly the whole Bible, and this has served him well in a secular way, for he has learned from it to speak in parables, terse epigrams that are readily interpreted by his followers, and have more force than the most brilliant rhetorical flights.

Kruger, in addition to his other accomplishments, is by far the best preacher in the Transvaal, and the Dutch Reformed Church boasts of some capable men there. He occupies the pulpit in a modern brick edifice across the street from his home about once a month, and always talks to standing-room only. He uses no notes, but speaks off-hand from a text, and does not hesitate to sprinkle a little humor in the discourse. In his speeches before the Raad he quotes scripture generously, and even more so in conversation.

As for his private life, that seems to be exemplary. After rising he prays for a long time in his room, and "talks over with the Lord" the questions of the day. When he develops a conviction in this way he proceeds to act on it. Kruger's plety once nearly cost him his life. A good many years ago he suddenly disappeared, and when he failed to show up, a searching party was made up to hunt for him. At the end of three days they found the future President, who was then a field cornet, lying face down on the open veldt. He had been praying three days and nights steadily, without food or water, and was nearly dead. When carried back and revived, he explained that he had done it as a chastisement for his sins.

The Other Side

The Other Side.

Two stories the Uitlanders relate to offset Kruger's pious disposition. One was printed in a Natal paper during my sojourn there, and I did not see it refuted, though I cannot vouch for its accuracy. The writer accused Oom Paul of punishing one of his Kaffir boys once by tying him under his wagon, spreading out legs and arms, and making them fast to the axiea. The boy was hauled for two days in this position, declared the writer. On another occasion Kruger, when he was trekking, lost an ox, and could not find another to take its place, so he hitched up a Kaffir in the team and trekking, lost an ox, and could not find another to take its place, so he hitched up a Kaffir in the team and trekking, lost an ox, and could not find another to take its place, so he hitched up a Kaffir in the team and trekking, lost an ox, and could not find another to take its place, so he hitched up a Kaffir in the team and trekking them fast to the axiea. Boer every time, though his life is a mighty unpleasant one at the best.

Cannot Serve Two Masters.

The first question I put to Oom Paul was why he did not give the Uitlander the right to vote, which the English put forth as their chief cause for complaint.

Mr. Kruger smoked hard for a moment, then laid down his pipe, and placing his hands on his knees, said: "A man cannot serve two masters. Either he will hate the one and cling to the other, or despise the one and love the other. Now, the Englishman wants to do this. He demands the franchise from me, desires to become a burgher, and yet when it comes to trouble, he would forsake us in a moment and claim the protection of the Queen. How can I give such men the chance to vote? They do not take any interest in our country. They have not come here to settle. They wish us no good. I want to be fair with every one who comes here to live, and when he has proved that he is a good citizen and has come to help us, I want him to vote. But we have a law for bigamy in the Transvaal, and it is necessary for a man to put off his old love before taking on a new."

When one has lived in Johannesburg, he recognized the truth of Mr. Kruger's reply. The Rand is a stamping ground for a great mass of people from all over the earth. Very few remain there one or two years, and only that long, for the most part, because they cannot raise the money to get away. They are only concerned in making a fortune rapidly, and returning to a pleasant country quickly as possible. You do not see persons moving out on the veldt and cultivating the soil; no one cares a rap about developing the country. Only the Boers are fit for that. But this surging mob is discontented. Nearly every one gambles in stocks, horse racing or poker, and when he loses it is attributed to the Boer government. Ninety-nine men out of a hundred have come there to "take a flyer," and it is immaterial to them who is running the government.

Not so with Mr. Rhodes and the English Colonial Office Lovever. There is the stan of Majuba Hill and the Jameson raid to be wiped out and $100,000,000 to be made from the gold mines, and England will never be happy, therefore, until she gets possession of the country, lock, stock and barrel. The only thing that stands in her way is that old, sleepy-looking fellow, who is now turning very down his pipe, and placing his hands on his knees, said: "A man cannot serve two masters. Either he weariness.

As a Lion Hunter.

Mr. Kruger related to me, graphically and briefly, the history of the Boers from the time they settled in Cape Colony, from whence they were driven out by the English, until they settled in the Transvaal. On this great trek they killed 6000 lions, out of which number Kruger himself killed 250. They fought their way step by step until they finally reached the long ridge known as the Witwatersrand, where they settled, all unconscious of the hidden wealth "It semed so poor," said Mr. Kruger, "that even the English did not begrudge it. So we established a government, developed a constitution, and laid the foundation for a nation. We built towns, cultivated the soil, and were making great progress and living peacefully when gold was discovered. Them new and perplexing questions arose, and England immediately became avaricious, but we were not willing to give up the country which we had developed by the sweat of our brow, and so there was Majuba Hill. You know about that?" Here Mr. Kruger bilinked slyly, and a laugh went around among the Boers. "So, now," continued Oom Paul, taking up his pipe and dropping into parables, "the gold fields are like a beautiful, rich young woman. Everybody wants her, and when they cannot get her, they do not want any one else to possess her."

"Can the English starve you out?" I then asked Oom

"Can the English starve you out?" I then asked Oom

"Can the English starve you have replied. "If not, the English can build a wall around us as high as Jericho and we will live and prosper." By cutting off all supplies the English military expects and hopes to speedily bring the Boers to terms in event of war. Against this Kruger has provided by building storehouses and granaries, where meat and grain are kept in great quantities.

ent defenses and power to wreck Johannesburg and the mines, afford sufficient menace to Great Britain to make her hesitate.

Mr. Kruger is now 76 years old, and has been elected to the Presidency four times. His salary is $35,600 a year, with $1500 for coffee. This he drinks flack, and so hot that the burghers say it will scald the hair off a dog. His life has certainly been a remarkable one, and at different stages he has been a farmer, herdsman, hunter, soldier, clergyman, ambassador, triumvir, financier, head of the army, and is now serving his fourth term as President. In recent years he has bought and sold land a good deal, and is reputed to be very wealthy. His habits and method of living are so simple, however, that he could have saved nearly all his salary in these years which would give him a tidy fortune.

As he closed our interview Mr. Kruger went across the hall into a low-ceilinged, whitewashed room and leaned for a moment over a placid-faced, motherly little woman, who was seated on a rocking-chair, darning stockings. This was Mrs. Kruger, who, though one never hears of her, interested me mightily because she seemed so utterly oblivious to the turmoils that are besetting her husband's nation. She got Mr. Kruger's hat, escorted him to the door, and then went back to her knitting. It was difficult to think of her as the first lady of the land. Yet she has been Mr. Kruger's constant helpmeet through all the years of his public life, and their affection for each other seems to have grown with each succeeding year. She is Mr. Kruger's second wife, and was a Miss Du Plessis, a name of prominence in South Africa. Kruger's first wife was an aunt of Miss Du Plessis, and bore him one son, who died. Sixteen children were the fruit of this second marriage, and of those seven are living. The girls are comfortably married to burghers in and about Pretoria, and the boys takes an active interest in the army. One sonin-law, Capt. Eloff, has made himself famous by building the most expensive mansion in South Africa

THE LEGEND OF THE LOTUS.

Far, far into the purple mists of time,
A river lead of forth from a hidden source,
Known only to the clouds, and jungle wild,
That nursed, and cradled it in infancy.
And by and by it grew a mighty stream,
That, first uncertain, then with freedom's song,
Rejoicing bounded forth from Nature's breast,
To fill its mission at the god's behest.

And out from Flora's realm, a Cherub hand-Dropt a wee seed beneath the yearning tide, And all the bost of the Seraphic throng And all the bost of the Seraphic throng Sang to that little germ, that was to be, The emblem of the Soul, and purity; And as the waves of harmony sweet on. The pulse of life within, awoke—sent out A feeble thrill into the earth below. Then rooting firmly to the river bed With heart of praise, by aspiration led, It slowly through the waters pushed its head.

So, reaching ever onward toward the light, Transmuting from below to larger life, At last a leaf unfolded to the sun, And then—Ah! Mystic Shrine! The lotus bud Unfurl'd its shining petals to the air, In wondrous beauty and with fragrance rare

Thus, long before the sphinx in vigils mute, With Gizeh pyramid its secret held, Or Thebes, now silent mid the ghostly sands, Loom'd her colossal splendors to the Nile—This lily-flower upon the river sod, And India, Egypt, and the islands there, Preserve this sacred symbol everywhere.

For, as the lotus germinates and bloom By rooting firmly in the muddy soil,
Then consecrates its fragrance, and its form
To lift the lower, and itself adorn;
So does the human soul, an alien here,
Leave Heaven's gate to tread life's tearful way—
To wrest by contact all the senses hold,
And for the All, its latent powers unfold;
Then, when full conquest thus has been attained,
When for the ALL its victories are gained,
High in the light, with Golden Center Whole,

COX'S QUAINT VISITING CARD.

[Philadelphia Post:] Not long ago an office boy in one of the great newspaper offices came grinning into the room occupied by the Sunday editor.

There's a man outside," he said, "who won't give his name."
"Why didn't you ask him for his card?" the Sunday asked.

"I did," said the boy, "and this is what he handed me."

The boy laughed again and placed a small slip of pasteboard on the editors deck. On it was the neat pen drawing of a brownie. Then fid the editor smile. "You dunce," he said to the boy, "that is the gentleman's card. It's Palmer Cox, father of the brownies." So it was. Mr. Cox has a most happy way of putting his quaint little people on his cards and on the cards of his friends. He always has a new position for one of the well-known children of his fancy. In scrap books over the country there are hundreds of original drawings of the quaint little people with large stomachs, and no two of the many sketches are alike.

HOW HORSES ARE BLEACHED.

[London Sport:] One of the most interesting and novel schemes that is resorted to when it comes to "doctoring" up a herse for sale is "peroxiding." Horses "doctoring" up a horse for sale is "peroxiding." Horses just suitable for carriage work, save that they do not quite match in color, are now "chemically blondined" to the tint desired in the twinkling of an eye. A "peroxided horse" shows what has been done to him soon after his new owner takes him away, and frequently he has to be "touched up." This bleaching does not injure the horses any more than it does the average girl; but the chemically-tinted coat seldom looks well when closely examined, the dark roots of the hair showing on careful inspection. Yet it deceives the average hayer, and so answers its purpose. ing on careful inspection. Yet it huver, and so answers its purpose.

F-2-2-2-2 NEEDS OF PORTO RICO. GEN. GUY V. HENRY TALKS OF THE > SITUATION IN THE ISLAND. From a Special Correspondent.

EW YORK, Aug. 28.—"The recent tornado in Porto Rico was, in my opinion, a direct visitation of Providence," said Brig.-Gen. Guy V. Henry, late Governor-General of Porto Rico, and now on detached duty in Plattsburg, near President McKinley. "It was sent by Providence to attract the attention of the American people to the crying needs of that stricken island, and to dispel the growing distrust of the Porto Ricans toward the United States.

"Both ends have been gained, and now that thousands of dollars and shiploads of provisions and other supplies have been generously poured into the island by Americans, discontent there will vanish, and needful reforms quickly follow."

There is probably no American who can speak with such authority on Porto Rico, its present condition, and its future, as can Brig.-Gen. Guy V. Henry, late Govrnor-General of the island. His distinguished services as one of Gen. Miles's commanders in the attack on Porto Rico, his experience as Governor of the district of Ponce, and later as Governor-General of the entire island, gave him an excep-tional opportunity to study the people and the situation in this, the first of our colonies.

From time to time during the past few months, items the condition of the island was not what it should be. Delegates and individuals have paid unofficial visits to Washington from Porto Rico, and in one instance a committee of representative citizens journeyed from the island to our national capital for the sole purpose of appealing to the President for relief from what they termed grievous wrongs and oppressions.

They Bade Us Welcome

They Bade Us Welcome.

"When you landed and drove away the Spaniards we welcomed you with open arms," said a member of the Committee of Business Men from San Juan. "We said to our compatriots and our families: 'See, the Americans will take our beloved island into the great Union, and we will be as prosperous and happy as the States there. We will have freedom, and business will increase, and Porto Rico will laugh with joy and plenty. But it is now many months eince the Spanish flag came down and the Stars and Stripes rose in its place, and what is our condition? Our people are wretched and miserable. In the mountain districts the very poor die from starvation. Those who raised cattle and coffee and had trade with Cuba—trade which brought them a competence—have had that trade ruined by an excessive duty. We are a part of the United States, yet we pay import and export taxes the same as Spain or any other foreign country.

"We are a docile people, yet you must regard us with suspicion and hostility, else you would not keep our own prominent men in the background and administer our affairs with military officers, unacquainted with our needs, our mode of living and our character. I ask you, my friend, is all this right?"

That there are some grounds for the complaints made in the appeal of this Porto Rican cannot be denied. In fact, it is tacitly admitted by President McKinley and his advisers, but as there are generally two sides to every story, some excuse can be found for the apparent injustice being done the Porto Ricans.

"In regard to the question of high tariff still being enforced in the island," Brig.-Gen. Guy V. Henry sald to the writer, "the condition of affairs is as follows: When the American forces obtained control of Porto Rico it was necessary to recognize some form of government for the time being. We did not have any ready-made principles and plans to apply at once, so the laws then governing the island we English.

"When the translation was made, certain high duties on such articles as flour and grain were lowered, but the main schedule was continued for the time being. The people found themselves doubly burdened. They lost their interstate trade with Spain, that country having imposed an excessive duty on all articles as soon as the island was ceded to the United States, and they gained no free trade with the latter country.

An Increase All Around.

An Increase All Around.

"In addition, through an unaccountable error, the duties between Porto Rico and America were actually increased. This is due to the difference in value between the Porto Rico peso and the American dollar, the former being worth only 60 cents. In the payment of dues at the customhouses on the island, the American value is called for, so it naturally follows that the poor Porto Rican, when called upon to pay '$1' duty on any article, must surrender $1.60, or 60 cents, Porto Rican money, more than he paid under Spanish misrule!"

on any article, must surrender $1.60, or 60 cents, Porto Rican money, more than he paid under Spanish misrule!"

On this question the United States Insular Commission (consisting of Robert P. Kennedy, C. W. Watkins and H. G. Curtis) sent down by the President last February, has this to say:

"The people of Porto Rico find themselves in an anomalous position. By the cession of the island to the United States they are as to Spain now a foreign country, and deprived of many advantages they possessed before in dealing with Spain. Now prohibitive duties are in many cases assessed in the ports of that country. They naturally expect greater benefits by becoming a part of the United States possessions, but so far they find that they are still regarded as a foreign State by the customs laws of the United States. They are not an independent province, and but very few, if any, now desire to become such. No law has been passed by Congress making the island a collection district, and no officers provided to grant clearances as between different ports of the United States for coast-wise service, and no law has been prepared fixing the duties as between this country proper and dependences or outlying possessions, as doubtless may be done under the wording of the Constitution. So duties on the goods imported into the United States are still as though Porta Rico warm a foreign country. Duties are likewise demanded, though at different rates, in some instances as before the cession from Spain, on all goods imported into Porto Rico from the United States."

Congress Must Give Relief.

In reference to the possibility of changing this unjust state of affairs, Gen. Henry said: "Relief really rests with the Congress of the United States. The President deplores the conditions in Porto Rico even more than he has publicly stated. He recognizes the need of immediate reforms, but in a way he is power-less. Action under our laws must be left to Congress. Changes in such national affairs cannot be made in an analysis of the conditional affairs cannot be made in an analysis. hour, nor by the stroke of a pen. Critics who claim that inaction is due to dilatoriness have little knowledge of the subject. The reciprocity laws of the United States provide for a treaty to be made by the President, with the advice of the Senate, with some foreign dent, with the advice of the Senate, with some foreign power, but since there is, as to Porto Rico, no one to treat with and no foreign power, this provision certainly does not apply. The only solution is in the action of the Congress of the United States."

In the minds of the people of Porto Rico, the presence of American military forces in the island is not less an evil and a burden than the tariff itself. That the present system of military control is obnoxious to them cannot be doubted. Gen. Henry says of them: "They are a most gentle and lovable people, and for the greater part are entirely worthy of our trust and confidence."

In the report of the Insular Commission already referred to, can be found these statements:

"The people of Porto Rico are most loyal in their devotion to their new country, and are solicitous to be regarded as a part of the United States. Upon every hand we heard of all classes and conditions ready and willing to accept American institutions and to be conwilling to accept American institutions and to be content with them, and at the same time they are asking that the spirit of our laws and institutions be given them, and that they be quickly relieved of the oppressive laws to which they have so long been subjected by Spanish rule. They are generally a peaceful and law-abiding people."

According to Gen. Henry, this question of military rule should, like the tariff and financial conditions, be left to Congress. Unquestionably what is termed "one-man power," that is, rule by a military governor who acts solely under orders from the President of the United States or on his own responsibility, is the only man power," that is, rule by a military governor who acts solely under orders from the President of the United States or on his own responsibility, is the only possible plan for the present.

Statehood is not to be thought of, a Territorial form of government is as yet impracticable, and therefore, the one course rational and convenient is military rule. A reduction in the number of troops and the employment of a Porto Rico local military force and a body of insular police, might offer a temporary relief to the feelings of the sensitive natives. During Gen. Henry's administration of the island, he employed the police to great advantage. They were greatly welcomed and approved. El Pais, a newspaper of San Juan, said, under date of April 27, 1899: "The insular police force is formed of men of the best Porto Rican society; they are well educated, well built, and courageous fellows. The force is an honor to this country, and natives and strangers admire this institution. The press of the whole country constantly reports valuable services performed by the insular police. For this reason the innovation has been received by the country as a bleasing."

The Natives Suffer Bitterly.

The Natives Suffer Bitterly.

The many apparently unjust laws, and the tardiness in setting the tariff, money and civil government questions, has led to considerable suffering among the natives. They were, in the majority of cases, entirely too proud to beg, and if they applied at all for relief it was for work. Gen. Henry, who knew them well and had a kindly sympathy for the natives under his care, devoted a part of the funds accumulating from taxes and duties to the building of roads and other public works.

"The expenditures gained two worthy ends," he said.
"The money, of which I paid out come $6000 daily throughout the island, resulted in the construction of good roads, which facilitated the transportation of crops, and also gave an army of deserving men honest

Gen. Henry's successor, Gen. Davis, found it necessary, for reasons not quite clear, to stop the public work, but the recent tornado caused him to resume the scheme.

Gen. Guy V. Henry, in summarizing the troubles and conditions of Porto Rico, said:

"There is no question that affairs down there are in need of radical change, but only Congress can act upon the tariff, money, military government and other vexed questions. Upon Congress rests the responsibility for the future welfare of the unfortunate Porto Ricans."

6 CIDERIA ACROSS SIBERIA.

MORE ABOUT THE INTERESTING CITY OF VLADIVOSTOK.

From a Special Correspondent.

LADIVOSTOK (Siberia,) June 1, 1899.—In previous letters I have spoken of Vladivostok as booming and booming it is—in a Russian sense. The Siberian Railroad work calls for many supplies in the form of tools, machinery and provisions, that are brought to and sold through Vladivostok, and from this place are also sent goods and provisions used in a large backcountry. The demand for machinery and miscellaneous supplies is steadily increasing, and in the very nature of things must continue to increase. Say all there is to be said of Siberia's natural resources, and it seems impossible to say too much. The industrial conditions are against the country becoming self-sustaining. The Siberian of the peasant and other common classes is too often lazy and shiftless, has no thought of the morrow and does not take kindly to farming life. Farming in Eastern Siberia, under the most favorable Russian conditions, according to what I have seen and heard, will not reduce the demand for food stuffs from the United States, and more particularly the demand for Pacific Coast products, for the reason that the populamtion of this portion of Siberia is growing faster than the agricultural output.

The talk of Eastern Siberian wheat competing with Pacific Coast wheat is bosh. The kernel of the Siberian wheat is small and damp and makes poor flour, and the wheat cannot be improved. The finest samples of American wheat sown in the soil at once degenerate into Siberian wheat, and Siberian wheat sown in California immediately yields the standard article of the Golden too often lazy and shiftless, has no thought of the mor-

As Siberia gains population she will draw more and more heavily on the outside world for machinery, manufactured articles and food stuffs. A good country for the roving American? Not by any means. The foreigner who succeeds in Siberia must have rare tact, a good financial backing and the faculty of minding his own business. You enter the country on a passport, live in the country by official permission of the government, and the police authorities permit you to leave. You cannot enter Vladivostok until the Chief of Police has seen your passport, and no agent will sell you a ticket for your passport, and no agent will sell you a ticket for an outgoing ship or steamer until the Chief of Police has said you may leave. You cannot live at a hotel without registering your name, occupation, etc., on a police certificate; and you may be sure the landlord will promptly poke the paper under your nose and ask your algnature.

Little Chance for Foreigners.

Americans have succeeded and are succeeding in Siberia, in a few instances, but their success is due to partnership with Russian officials and financiers, through whom business and concessions have been secured. No foreigner may buy real estate in Vladivostok. The law foreigner may buy real estate in Vladivostok. The law forbids it. A few pieces of land that were acquired years ago are held by Americans, and the smart advance in city lots in the last two years has inured to their advantage, but in future the Russian will be the sole beneficiary of his boom. Foreigners have to learn how to do business in Siberia, and the number of foreign houses is small. First of all you must respect Russian customs. You take off your hat when you enter a store and remove your overcoat and overshoes before entering a house or office, Religion and loyalty are synonomous terms with the Russian. If above the common grade he is a stickler for formality. Society and government are both bureaucratic. No matter what hour of the day you make an official call, or call on a high official, you must wear your dress suit. This rule is imperative. The official hour for calling is 9 a.m.

Vladivostok is nominally ruled by a Mayor and Council, who are elected by the few landed residents entitled to vote. The city is really dominated by Maj.-Gen.
Tshitshagof, Governor of the maritime province of Vladivostok, a soldier of fine record and distinguished appearance, whose courtesy I have cause to hold in grateful recollection. I met him the day after he assumed charge of the district, and he was kind enough to spare half an hour from his official duties to talk of Siberia and its prospects. Like all other high officials with whom I came in contact, he is ambitious for the speedy development of the country and believes that development will aid the commercial interests of the United States.

The Spirit of the Place.

were in Vladivostok a week and had a fair chance We were in Vladivostok a week and had a fair chance to catch the spirit of the place; to see that a large business calls for a rare combination of cleverness and commercial courage; to see that the merchant or mercantile agent must be equal to dealing in every commodity, from an eyelet to a machine for unloading coal at the rate of 100 tons per hour, to see with pleasure and pride two American sailing ships enter the harbor the same day and note a single Japanese flag was the only other foreign signal in port. only other foreign signal in port.

As soon as the Siberian Railway shall have been finished and the fare from St. Petersburg to the point fixed at the rate already decided upon—120 rubles ($60) -Vladivostok will take on metropolitan airs. Even no -Vladivostok will take on metropolitan airs. Even now a pretty theater of modern architecture and equipment, stalls, boxes, folding chairs, etc., seating 500 people, is about to be opened in a blaze of glory. In an educational way the city makes an excellent showing. Two thousand children attend the seven schools. The general stores show the spring goods of late designs, quite up to our standard, and the two leading stores have a readymade suit, wrap and millinery department, where garments and hats of modern style may be bought. The wives of the officers and merchants were more stylishly dressed than the majority of women we saw in Shaghai, the swell city of the Orient. The sailor hat has reached Siberia and is worn by women and children of all classes and all ages. Siberian matrons and maids are frequently dissatisfied with the designs of swagger American hatters and too often mar the intended effect of the trim sailor by loading it with showy feathers and flowers. The Tam o' Shanter is popular with small girls and is made in colors that set the teeth on edge. An occasional Tam band on the hat of a school girl bears the name of a Russian ship. The school boy, no matter how small, wears the cap and high boots of the accepted Russian dress and his gray blouse is always confined with a shining black belt and metal buckle. His pranks on the street prove that he is a good running mate for his lively American brother.

The City's Jail Birds.

We did not meet any exiles as such in Vladivostok, but we had a daily view of as fine an assortment of jail birds as any place can show. The City Jail is a one-story wooden building and stands in a yard bounded by a spike-topped fence. Soldiers are on guard day and night and from our windows we could see sentries marching to and fro on the other side of the street. Pleasant days the forty prisoners were escorted to church, or taken for a walk, the desperate men in leg chains, and with due deference to the tales of Siberian prison horrors it seemed to me that as compared with men closely confined in our American prisons and jails, denied pure air and a chance to exercise, Siberian lawbreakers were picnickers.

In time Vladivostok will have a handsome and stylish jail. The city has a promising future because the Rus-We did not meet any exiles as such in Vladivostok,

In time Vladivostok will have a handsome and stylish jail. The city has a promising future because the Russian government is determined to make Siberia attractive in proportion to its resources. It has a park on the main street, in which the band plays three afternoons a week while the people promenade, a small affair, to be sure, but still a park. A striking feature of the city landscape, on the bluff overlooking the harbor is a graceful granite shaft erected two years ago in honor of Admiral Nivelskoy, whose name is linked with the history of the Amur River. Tablets recite the services rendered Russia by the brave sailor, and an eagle standing on the globe, his talons over the Russian Empire, symbolize the expansion policy of the Muscovite. The bust of the admiral sits in a niche facing the water.

Empire, symbolize the expansion policy of the Muscovite. The bust of the admiral sits in a niche facing the water.

No Pienic to Travel in Eastern Siberia.

KHABAROVK (Siberia,) June 3, 1899.—Traveling in Eastern Siberia is no picnic. This is the first thought born of actual experience Take all the care you can, plan as you may, read all that has been written about Siberia, talk with Siberians, follow their advice, and still traveling in Eastern Siberia will only yield what Gilbert calls "modified rapture." We had been at Vladivostok a week, and were eager to start on our trip across the empire to St. Petersburg. We were not in a tearing hurry, we were not trying for a time record, but we had seen Vladivostok and environs, and wanted to move on. On the evening of May 29 we leraned that by starting on the train for Khabarovk at 10 o'clock the following morning, we could connect with a steamer from Nicolaiewsk for Blagovestchensk, where we would change to a smaller steam going to the head of navigation on the Amur River. This good news was gratefully received, and we packed for the overland journey.

At 3:50 a.m., May 30, the work of getting to and into the train was inaugurated. Our baggage consisted of a small sole-leather trunk, a large valise, a Gladstone bag, a holdall containing bankets, pillows, rugs, umbrellas, etc., and two small hand satchels—surely, not an imposing equipment for a married couple. We could not reserve berths on the sleeper, we could not buy tickets the day before we started, nor could we find out whether the three first-class compartments in the sleeper were likely to be crowded. There are five compartments in the sleeper, three first-class and two second class, and the latter differ from the former in that they look a trifle dingiler. Our movement to the train thorugh a drizzling rain was managed in a masterly way by our host, and we credit him with no mean triumph. At 8:20 a.m. several Koreans took our baggage on their backs, each piece resting in the forked stick receptacle exclusive

The gauge of the road is five feet, and the equipment The gauge of the road is any leek, and the equipment at this end is of German make and pattern. The cars are very wide, and the compartments run crosswise, and one enters from a narrow, longitudinal passage on the right side of the sleeper. The passage is so narrow that two people cannot pass, and as a result, if you are looking out of a window on that side of the car, and some one wishes to pass, you must step into a compartment.

The train was scheduled to start at 10 a.m., and really did start at 10:10, which was fairly prompt for Siberia and in the circumstances, as the trains run to Khabarovk only three times a week, Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday, it is natural that in the start for this journey to the bank of the Armur there should be a trifling delay.

The distance from Vladivostok to Khabarovk is 716 versts (approximately 516 miles,) the fare is 19 rubles and 50 kopecks ($9.75) first-class, and our excess baggage cost us 9 rubles and 80 kopecks ($4.90,) the latter charge surprising. A single ticket allows a passenger one pood of baggage free (a pood being forty Russian and thirty-six English pounds,) and on the excession of the part of th cess you are charged at the rate of one-quarter of a kopeck per pood per verst, one-eighth of a cent for thirty-six pounds every five-eighths of a mile.

We found our compartment high, with two facing seats, and when we realized that at least two other seats, and when we realized that at least two other people might occupy the compartment with us, we thanked our stars we had little baggage. The Russians have the baggage habit, and usually carry as many boxes and bundles as they can well control, including in Siberia, of course, their bedding. Two Russians and their traps in our compartment would have buried us out of sight. Fortunately, we had that compartment to ourselves. The seats were deep, high and comfortable. The window was between the seats, and to look out one had to stand. Directly in front of the window was a stationary card table, which accented the inconvenience of looking out. At each end of sach seat, and half way up the wall, where the upper berth hung at night, were small brass ash and cigarette holders. From the smell of dead smoke, and the ashes, paper and stains, it was evident that this was the most popular furnishing in the car with majority of travelers. The interior of the car had a substantial but cheap look, in marked contrast to the varnished exterior, so glistening that it suggested lacquer. Perched over the door, beyond the reach of everybody save the man with the ladder, was a glass box, in which, when it was obviously dark, was placed a tall candle that burned till daylight.

Going to Bed a Serious Matter.

Going to Bed a Serious Matter.

When we said that we wanted to go to bed, a very grimy man, with very dirty hands, and his train flag under his arm, officiated as porter. Going to bed on a Siberian train is a serious matter. In order to arrange the berth, bolts have to be shot, springs touched, chains dropped, seats turned a complete somersault, straps loosened, and the series of movements accompanied with enough banging for a royal salute. We felt glad we were not in the supercilious gaze of an American car porter while our husky chambermaid was having his catch-as-catch-can contest. Each berth had its apology for a mattress. There were no sheets, no pillows, and no bed clothing. Our own rugs and pillows filled the void.

We ran along the eastern shore of Vladivostok Harbor for about two hours, passing out of the fog and rain into sunshine. For hours the train ran through a rolling and partially-cultivated country. The farmers were plowing with modern single plows, and using horses and oxen. On two or three occasions we saw four horses hitched to a plow. About twenty miles from the city we came to the Nadesdenskaja coal mines, owned by a Vladivostok notary. I was told that the mines yield a good anthracite, and have been exploited by M. Henraid, the Belgian mining engineer, now in Tientsin, in behalf of King Leopold, looking after the mining and railway concessions in which that ruler is interested.

At present Russian and other naval vessels in orien-and railway concessions in which waste ested.

At present Russian and other naval vessels in oriental waters are largely dependent on Japan for coal, usually coaling at Nagasaki, but Russia, taking time by the forelock, is developing coal in her own domain. There is another mine in the northern part of this coal field and nearer Vladivostok carrying other kinds of coal and from this latter deposit the port has been furnished 3000 tons. The mine has been prospected but not developed. A shaft has been sunk twenty-five to thirty meters, and fourteen or fifteen veins exposed, and a French engineer guarantees this northern deposit alone will yield 70,000 tons the first year, and will increase enormously. The people told the sexton, and the sexton tolled the bell. I tell the story as it is told me.

At Podgorodnajai station, one mile from Vladtvostok, is fuel of the coke variety. The whole country between Podgorodnajai and Kadeshdenskaja is one vast coal field, and the area is nearly all in one ownership. If the field were in the United States, the owners would ere this have come together and achieved a paying and enduring monorpile.

ship. If the field were in the United States, the owners would ere this have come together and achieved a paying and enduring monopoly.

During our stay at Vladivostok we heard talk of gold, and on the train I met Etienne Epstein, one of the managers of the Russo-Chinese Bank, the financial institution of Eastern Siberia, who gave me facts and figures. He says prospecting for gold near the city has been mere scratching, and that with the dirt-cheap labor the claims located should be made to pay. The Alexander Neveky mine, three hours from Vladivostok by sea, was worked for a time and then abandoned. The owner had an idea the Chinese had exhausted it, Mr. Epstein recently sent an engineer to the mine, who showed the miners how to work, and in a few days two and one-half pounds of gold were brought into the bank, the result of modern methods. The engineer reports that with a fair water supply he might get two hundred pounds of gold in the season. Naturally, Vladivostok has coal and gold among its prime topics of conversation. Another gold property, on the Island of Askelon, owned by a Vladivostok ploneer named Lindholm, is also being exploited, and in a few months its value may be known. The big gold centers of Eastern Siberia are in the Nicolayevsk and Blagoveshenck regions.

A Russian Dining Car.

The mining information whetted our appetite, and we walked along the vestibule train to the dining-car. We were eager to see the diner, as the Vladivostokians had assured us it was the real thing. A table extended nearly the length of the car. Across the farther end was a counter. A clean, but coarse cloth covered the table, and from end to end run a narrow strip of yellow ollcloth, holding castors, pappers and salts and plates of black and white bread. The ornaments were two handsome brass candelabra, two Chinese vases and three potted palms. From a pile of clean napkins, knives, forks and spoons, in the middle of the table the passenger selected his equipment for the meal. The menu offered vegetable soup, shrimps, crab, fried fish, oysters, chicken, vegetables, sweets, fruits, tea, coffee, wines and beer. The charges were modest for an acceptable dinner.

wines and beer. The charges were modest for an acceptable dinner.

We reached Nicolsk, a town of from 30,000 to 40,000 inhabitants, mostly soldiers, at 2:40 p.m., and here left many of our passengers. Our travel had shown us that the roadbed is fairly smooth, that the train runs about twelve miles an hour on an average, and the stations are ambitious and aftractive. The buildings are of brick and stone, and usually stand in small, well-kept gardens. The windows generally show potted plants and lace curtains, about which there is occasionally a suggestion of artistic taste. Each station has its public well, for lower-class pasengers, and as the train stops dozens of men leap from the car with teakettles, halting, perhaps, to buy a loaf of bread from the peasant women clustered about.

There are twenty stations between Vladivostok and

There are twenty stations between Vladivostok and Khabarovk. The railroad crosse many mountain meadows and gulches, and the grading, on account of cutting and filling, has been a heavy task. We arrived at Khabarovk about 3:20 p.m., having made the trip of 716 versts in twenty-nine houre.

HOME OF JULIET.

A VISIT TO SCENES MADE FAMOUS BY SHAKESPEARE.

By a Special Contributor.

ERE you looking for Miss Capulet's house X inquired a stately looking old gentleman of us, as we were strolling down the deserted streets of Verona. After a slight pause and a peculiar jerk upon the main spring of my brain, I answered "Yes, we are." For during that interval I realized that that very grand looking individual was referring to the long-departed and much-lamented and adored Juliet. 'I will take pleasure in showing you the house. I am going in that direction," said he, as he quietly took his place by my side. He was dressed in a long black diagonal coat made many years ago, for it shone like stove polish at every seam and turning, but it was so immaculately brushed that we wondered that there was any part of the coat left. His hat was an ancient square-topper, his high and carefully trimmed collar, his wide cravat tied in the stock style, his tight, shiny trousers and thin-worn but also shiny boots, all gave trousers and thin-worn but also shiny boots, all gave the impression of genteel poverty.

But his manners; they were so stately and grand that after venturing a few commonplace remarks, such as the weather, the lack of pavement in the streets of Verona, etc., all of which were met with disdainful silence, we fell to speculating among ourselves as to the probable identity of our new friend. Was he an Italian prince reduced in circumstances to such a degree that he had not left the price of an ocean steamer ticket, or merely a count who did not care to leave his beloved Verona, but preferred to walk the streets of his cherished city ruminating upon its past glories and present beauties? cherished city ruminating upon its past glories and present beauties?

It was a beautiful city, and on our way to the Capulet

It was a beautiful city, and on our way to the Capulet house we passed the glorious old cypress trees, the like of which are not to be found in the whole world! We learned that in Verona. But at least Pliny and Julius Caesar and Catullus and Virgil have all gazed upon their rich, dark foliage, for they said so. Shouts of triumph stirred their quiet branches when Stilicho defeated Alarac and drove him from Italy—the last Roman victory they ever witnessed. Generation has succeeded generation and the age of these celebrated cypress trees is reported to be 4000 years; well, they are still the "most solemn and stately trees in Italy." We paid a hasty visit to the cathedral. The porch has some very grotesque carving. Among other figures, a pig stands erect holding a book and dressed in monastic garb. The ancient Knights, Roland and Oliver, stand guard on either side of the doorway, one with his mace and the other his sword. These two are well known by the equal blows they dealt a thousand years ago, and will be remembered by the proverb, "a Roland ago, and will be remembered by the proverb, "a Roland for an Oliver," long after their deeds are forgotten. We passed many old palaces, some grand, but all more or less decayed.

"Here is the house you seek," said our prince, as he solemnly stood in front of a tall square-fronted mandon, with a most improbable balcony perched up in front of the second story and on the front of the house. Now Shakespeare did not say that the balcony was on the front of the house nor so high up as this one, for no love-lorn lover could scale the perpendicular wall to reach the supports of this balcony, so we demanded to be shown the rear. We knew it was to the rear of the house that Romeo had gyrated when he scaled the walls and sought for another glimpse of his glorious Juliet, whose eyes,

"Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven."

Juliet, whose eyes,

"Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, did entreat
To twinkle in their spheres till they return."

Our prince gave us permission to photograph the house, but would not yield to our entreaties to be permitted to explore the garden. We contented ourselves by picturing Juliet as she appeared to Romeo, when he clasped his hands and sighed:

"See here who lears her check when her hand!

ee, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! that I were a glove upon that hand, at I might touch that check!"

Having sighed long enough, we went in quest of Juliet's tomb. After quite a long walk we came to a large garden inclosed within a high wall. Prince Solemnity knocked grandly once, twice, thrice upon the portals and, lo, they were opened by a band of rag-amuffins, a woman and six dirty little children, all clamoring for pennies. Our prince waved them aside and said to us: "De not indulge them,"

The way lay through a beautiful arbor covered with grape vines, laden with huge bunches of luscious ripe grapes, nowhere (except in California) are there such affort there rose in view the tomb of the ancient Capulets—a stone affair in many degrees of preservation. Entering a wide open doorway, reminding us something of the tomb of Gen. Washington at Mount Vernon, we beheld the last resting place of the beautiful Juliet. It is a large stone sarcophagus, very plain and very large.

THE HOME OF JULIET.

We looked into it, but Juliet was not there—only several thousand visiting cards. We added ours, and solemnly turned and retraced our steps through the arbor, reviving ourselves with a bunch of grapes, and continued our "doing" Verona. We wondered if we should thank the prince for all the trouble he had taken in showing us the important sights of Verona, but we feared to offend him, and yet the curious manner in which he carried one hand back of him and the nervous way in which his fingers closed and opened, as if to which he carried one hand back of him and the nervous way in which his fingers closed and opened, as if to feel if there were anything there, aroused us to the fact that perhaps we had better slip a coin into his palm and say, "Good morning." We did, he raised his hat and solemnly strode away and we discovered that our prince was only a count (er) of coins for showing the sights of Verona.

and have it come out all right," said a little woman plaintively the other day. 'I thought I had such a good one not long ago. I was walking along and heard one street boy say to another, 'Oh, you go buy 10 cents' worth of potash.' 'What for?' says No. 2. 'For 10 cents,' yelled the other, and ran off giggling.
"I thought it was pretty good, and I'd try it on Charlie at supper. But when I told him to go buy 10 cents' worth of potash he never said a word, and I knew another joke had fallen flat and kept still. But the worst was later. He put on his hat and vanished after supper, ceming back in a minute with a little parcel, that he handed to me.

"'What's that," asked I.
"'Why, the potash you said you wanted,' answered

""What's that? asked I.
""Why, the potash you said you wanted," answered
he and I nearly had hysterics on the spot. Did you ever hear anything so perfectly awful? I won't ever

CALIFORNIA'S MOUNTAINS

LIKE to study our mountains, for there is nothing that seems so much like a miracle of nature as they. How different from the mountains of the East are our California sierras. They are clad, not so much in forests, as with color and with light, that is forever changing, breaking now into resplendent brightness as if every sunbeam had been melted into liquid folds and thrown about them, hiding their ruggedness like a veil, and then transformed in some vast, unseen alembic, into glowing piles of red and crimson, or the glory of royal purple that well befits their monarch forms. Never twice the same, they rise like new creations every hour, glorious sentinels of power and of pride.

Take our mountains, for instance, in our so-called winter. Perhaps we have just had a sandstorm blow over us, as a harbinger of the coming rains. The sky over us, as a harbinger of the coming rains. The sky for a time was grim with murky clouds and the mountains were hidden by their folds. But soon the winds draw off, the great north lies clear as a shining mirror, while the west alone is cloud-veiled.

Look now at the splendor of our mountain walls, lifted clear and shining to the very skies. Every peak and cañon, every jutting rock and crag stands out against the northern sky resplendent in color and perhaps slightly snow-touched. The snow lies as if softly sifted down, touching here and there a crag or peak, while the sunset lights are dimpling the whole range with rosy plashes of splendor.

I do not wonder that the early, untaught children of the Sun, whose heritage this land was before the white man came, made these high hills their altars and white man came, made these high hills their altars and kept forever burning upon them their sacred fires. There was something suggestive in their nature-worship—the suggestion of an unknown God—come mighty power outside of themselves, whose presence seemed lingering amid these sublime heights. What a land was this which was their heritage. No real estate man held it for them at so much an acre, but it was to them the gift of the Great Spirit, and as such they loved it. There nover was a romance written that had in it so much of the marvelous as the grand drama that God has penned and whose alphabet is men and women, and whose sentences are the nations which have come and gone since the world began. (And California's story is not the least interesting of them all, though there is still upon the pages of her past much that we have not yet translated, and that is still unknown.

But I was talking of our mountains. Nature has always delighted in doing things on a grand scale in the Golden State, and she has studied originality in her work. She has set up no molehill and called it a mountain per depend on the state of the state mountain, nor dropped any stream for a few feet and called it a cataract, or wonderful waterfall. Her highest falls seem leaping from the skies, girdled with eternal rainbows, and her higher mountains touch the blue firmament and nestle their heads among the midnight stars.

What does the Atlantic Coast know of real mountains such as are companioned with the cloude, and scarred with craters, their sides clasped by the arms of mighty cañons, whose beds lie below their lofty crests like the surface of an under world? What of mountain forests with giant trees 240 feet in height, living for centuries, the children of the hills? What of mountain forests with giant trees 240 feet in height, living for centuries, the children of the hills? What of glacier lakes nursed on the breasts of mountain meadows thousands of feet above the sea? What of flinty albums where mighty glaciers have written the story of the past among the mountain fastnesses high up beneath the stars? What of mountain-walled valleys, plowed out by the ice-shod glacier centuries ago, and its sides chiseled by its wondrous hand into domes and cathedrals and mighty granite temples fit for the Titans of old? You do not find them there. Our California mountains rise above them till those eastern ranges seem like molehills. They fling out their snow banners to the skies. They laugh at the tempest's fury and their great trees chant their anthems in the higher chambers of the winds. Their waterfalls seem to spring from some open door in the blue, and the world, the great world, is far off, lying like a silent dream below.

Here in our own Southern California ranges, there are sierra peaks that shoot upward almost eleven thousand feet till they seem to be lost in the eternal silence that broods above the world. They are the sentinels that guard our coast valleys against the deepth heats and the sharp winds, and they are royal in their everchanging beauty and grandeur. It would seem as if men could not be mean and low in their presence, for do they not speak unceasingly of omnipotent power and enduring might? They voice the grandeur of creation and are like an eternal psalm of beauty and strength whose echoes fill a

A SHORT RACE, STILL ON.

One day a Lie broke out of its inclosure and started to travel, with its pack neatly adjusted.

And the man who owned the premises—an editor, by the way—saw 7t, after it had started, and was in despair because he had not made the inclosure lie-tight.

So he called quickly to his swiftest Truth and said:
"A Lie has got loose and will do untold mischief if it is not stopped. I want you to go after it instanter, and bring it back or kill it!"
So the Truth started out after the fleet-footed Lie.

But this robust Lie had the start by one hour. At the end of the first day the Lie was going lickety-plit.

The Truth was a long way behind it, and was getting stiff and tired. It has not yet caught up. And never will.

HOW POSTAL CARDS ARE OFTEN WASTED.

"homen often send messages to their dressmaker or to dry goods shops on postal cards," says the Ladies' Home Journal, "attaching a bit of cloth, ribbon or lace as samples. This makes the card 'unmallable,' so it is always sent to the dead-letter office and invariably destroyed. Men—presumably men—not infrequently paste a clever joke or a telling political fragment upon a postal and send it to a friend—at least, start it; but it never arrives. Nothing may be attached to a postal card, nor may one, word be written upon the address side except the address itself."

WAR TELEGRAPHERS. STIRRING STORIES TOLD BY THE LIGHTNING MANIPULATORS.

By a Special Contributor.

T BOSTON, the 15th of September, the pioneer operators of America will meet to swap stories over the juvenile days of the most wonderful discovery of the century, the electric telegraph. Sald one of the Old Guard of civil war operators still doing duty at Western Union headquarters: "It will be a notable gathering at Boston and I hope I shall not be taken in a spirit of rivalry nor boastfulness when I say that the men of the original Military Telegraph Corps will be the lions of the occasion. Why shouldn't they? Army heroes are having their innings once more and be the lions of the occasion. Why shouldn't they? Army heroes are having their innings once more and let me tell you that the first man I saw killed at the front, and I got there, musket in hand, about as soon as the next one, was an operator doing a piece of rush work out of purely voluntary enthusiasm. The affair took place at Yorktown, the 4th of May, 1862. When the Confederates evacuated Yorktown, a bright Ohio boy named D. B. Lathrep, and his comrade of the corps, H. L. Smith, followed the Federal skirmish line into the works and dashed for the Confederate telegraph office to test the wires toward Richmond. The wires had been cut and were dangling from the pole. Lathrop gave a leap, landed at the base of the pole and came down with full force upon a percussion shell lying half hidden by some light rubbish. The shell exploded and was fatal.

"Yes, the war operators were the real ploneers of the hustling methods that put dot and dash on the skirmish line of American progress. The principle of telegraphy was in its infancy when the war broke out forty years ago. Commerce was conservative and not at all given to the rapid pace of modern times. There was needed a great war, with its fearful draft upon public patience, popular interest and universal sympathy. Added to these, war's imperative demand for lightning communications between armies served to develop this wonderful system of ruling the world's destinies as the genii rule fairyland, by the mysterious might of magic.

"The ancients made use of swift runners or of men with phenomenal voices to carry battle news and orders, found dismantled. Gen. Boyle had some urgent measages to send to distant posts asking help for the emergency, and threatened to shoot Fuller if he didn't get the wires in working order. To vindicate his good intentions—he was a civilian employé—as well as to save his life, the unlucky operator selzed the ground wire in one hand and the main wire in the other, using the ends as a key, and sent the message on its way. This was not so difficult, but it was necessary to get a return, which could only be done by reading the shocks on the wire. This he managed to do by using the tip of his tongue as a receiver.

Grit to the Backbone.

"Sometimes more than the ordinary nerve to be ex-ceted in an operator when near his key was demanded by the emergencies of war, as was the case in the Confederate siege of Knoxville in 1863. Burnside was shut up in Knoxville by Longstreet's corps of Virginians, while Grant and Sherman were hammering at Chattanooga. As soon as Mission Ridge fell before Grant's nooga. As soon as Mission Ridge fell before Grant's attacks, Sherman set out to relieve Knoxville by forced marches. Meanwhile a message reached Grant to the effect that Burnside could not hold out against Long-street longer than December 1. Sherman was to make the point by December 2 and Grant, army headquarters and Washington were all terribly exoited over the crisis. Finally, it was arranged to wire Burnside, through the four offices nearest Knoxville, to wait for help until December 2. It was the dead of night when the messages came to hand and a telegraph corps man at each office set out with the message secreted on his person. All four, by hook or crook, stole through the hostile lines and Knoxville was saved. "And operators were grit to the backbone in sticking out through the dangers involved in extra hazardous work. One of our best men in the Southwest was S. L. Robinson, a cipher operator at the headquarters of Gen. A. J. Smith. Smith went on a raiding expedition into Mississippi in 1864 and in order to clear the country ahead of him, of Forrest's cavalry, he dispatched his own cavalry, under the noted Grierson, to the front, giving the column a day's start. One day it became necessary for Smith to communicate a warning to Grierson, and Robinson started out with two orderlies for escort, to overtake the advance guard. When the party was well outside of the friendly lines, it fell into an ambush and Robinson received the full contents of a double-barreled shotgun loaded with slugs and buckshot in his arm and shoulder, also his right leg and hip. He was stripped of his instruments and dispatches, then tion of the garrison troops around Little Rock. This information in the hands of the enemy would be dangerous and the boy had forfeited his life in attempting to pass the lines with it. When under examination Dodd admitted that he had accompliees and was offered pardon if he would betray them. He refused and even on the gallows, in spite of the appeals of friends and relatives, put the temptation aside, himself signaling the executioneer to do his duty. The drop fell, carrying the brave boy operator and his secret into eternity. My informant, who witnessed the execution, declared that the lad met his doom with the coolness of a stole, while the spectators, chiefly soldiers, wept like children.

"From the southern camps comes, too, the most romantic piece of dare-devil operating en record. I mean the exploits of George Elisworth, the lightning manipulator whom Morgan, the great Kentucky raider, carried along on his staff when he crossed the Ohio into Federal territory, in 1862. Elisworth was a clever Alabama boy, who had mastered all the details of the art. He tapped wires and took off messages from Federal generals valuable to his chief. He also answered messages in a way to mislead the enemy and throw the troops attempting to catch the raiders off their route of operations. The career of George Elisworth on that one raid will make a chapter for the future history of old-time telegraphy. He is still living in Alabama, just where Morgan originaly picked him up, and attended the Confederate reunion at Nashville last year, much to the surprise and joy of all of Morgan's men, for there was a tradition among the survivors that Elisworth fell in the famous Ohio raid of 1863, or had died in captivity."

CAVIAR

A DELICACY FOR WHICH THE DEMAND CON-STANTLY INCREASES.

[The Kitchen:] In twenty-five years caviar has grown

[The Kitchen:] In twenty-five years caviar has grown to be one of the recognized delicacies of the American table. Of course, you know that it is only sturgeon roe, and all you get is not genuine, but the imitation approaches the genuine sufficiently to satisfy those who are not familiar with the real thing.

The general and greatly increased favor with which caviar is received has caused a great drain upon the sturgeon fisheries of Europe, and those of the United States and Canada, which within the past few years have been called upon to meet the demand, and in consequence are approaching exhaustion. When the call for sturgeon roe was first made, most of the supply was while Napoleon, imitating Caesar, brought to his aid while Napoleon, imitating Caesar, brought to his aid carrier pigeons. The very first method in our war to come to my notice was primitive indeed—simply a line of men stretched across the field—passing messages and orders by word of mouth. The theory of the inventor of this system doubtless was that the line could find shelter in a ravine or under a low ridge, but it turned out in this case that our men were hemmed in upon a broad open plain and the telegraphers made better targets than did the armed combatants. They stood the ordeal bravely.

"Shortly after this skirmish, which was near Yorktown, May 7, 1862, all enlisted men who could handle the key, I, myself, being of that number, were put to work upon a field telegraph, and wires strung upon bayonets or pointed saplings set in the earth, came into use on every battlefield. Every risk was taken in order to get a line working as quickly as possible. The getting at wires and establishing a circuit was the first thought of an operator when the army advanced. The bravery of young Lathrop, at Yorktown, was only one of the many instances of the same class which might be cited. In moving through the enemy's country the old wires, poles and offices were looked after first. If they had been destroyed or damaged, as was often the case, other means had to be improvised, and the wits of the operators were equal to the occasion. Operator Nichols, of our detachment, serving at Gen. Sumner's headquarters during the seven days' battles on the peninsula, found during the battle of Savage Station that he had but three feet of spare wire to lay a line twelve feet from the ground. The main wire of the army was in constant use and could not be grounded. from the ground The main wire of the army was in constant use and could not be grounded, although Sumner was anxious to communicate with his chief, some miles down the line. With the aid of some commissary men, Nichols piled cracker boxes against the pole, climbed up and opened his office. It was just dark and it was processory that dark and it was necessary to have a lantern to do the work. The light made a good target, which the enemy shelled briskly, but Nichols held his perch until Sumner ordered him down. This daring operator at that time ordered him down. This daring operator at that time was only 18.

"Another witty expedient was adopted by Operator Fuller of Gen. Boyle's command during Morgan's Kentucky raid, in 1863. Morgan's men captured Fuller's outfit while he was marching toward Columbia with Boyle's troops, trying to head off the raiders. When the force reached Columbia the talegraph office was set adrift in the woods. In spite of his wounds the brave fellow struggled back to meet Smith's advancing columns and freeh dispatches were sent forward in time to save Grierson from danger.

"Even under fire the operator was the equal of any soldier and his case was even more trying, for he was not prepared to fight back. While Banks's army was evacuating Winchester, pursued by Stonewall Jackson's troops, the Federal operator, Frank Drummond, sat at the key until the last bluecoat was out of sight. The Confederate yell sounded nearer and nearer, like the baying of hounds, and from all sides came the rattle of musketry. Drummond had secreted all his dispatch copies on his person and was detaching the instrument from the board to keep it out of the enemy's hands, when a belated orderly rushed in with a message for the commander of the reserves of Harper's Ferry. With one hand on the key he managed to draw out and burn his secreted dispatches. His horse, standing loose at the door, began to get nervous and he dropped the key long enough to tie the frightened animal and give him an assuring caress. Going back to the key Drummond again called Harper's Ferry, but getting no reply he took out the instrument and dashed it to pieces on the stone pavement. The Confederates were then firing down the streets in pursuit of straggling or belated Federals and Drummond ran the gauntlet of their bullets only to fall into the hands of Ashby's Confederate cavalry. A term in a war prison was the reward this brave fellow got for sticking to his post.

Some Confederate Heroes.

"From the Confederate side, through one of our corps "From the Confederate side, through one of our corps men, I have a story scarcely paralleled in soldierly devotion to duty. When the Confederate army abandoned Little Rock, in 1863, one of the military operators, David O. Dodd, stayed behind and lived sometime in the Federal lines. He was a lad of 17. Shortly after things had quieted down under Federal control, young Dodd left Little Rock, ostensibly to go to Mississippi, but in a few days he returned and lingered a short time in his old haunts. A second time he passed out of the lines unrestrained until he reached the outposts. There the guards searched his person and discovered some curious pencil marks in a memorandum book carried openly in his pocket.

"The boy was detained and examined at headquarters. The strange marks proved to be telegraphic dots and dashes which, when written out, furnished a description of all the new Federal fortifications and the distribuprocured from the northern rivers flowing into the Atlantic and from the great fresh-water lakes on our northern boundaries—especially from the Lake of the North. Within the past two years there has been a very large catch in set nets and pounds off the beaches of New Jersey and Long Island. This has added measurably to the supply of eggs, and has proved a most profitable industry to the fishermen. With the ocean take and that of the rivers and lakes, our annual production of roe for the making of caviar cannot be less than 240,000 pounds.

than 240,000 pounds.

The weight of roe in proportion to that of each fish is from 10 to 14 per cent. As no one who uses this delicacy will consume more than an ounce for a single portion, the contribution of the United States and Canada is a valuable addition to the European output. The weight of eggs taken from each female sturgeon varies. Those taken on the spawning grounds of the rivers carry a much higher percentage of roe than those caught in the sea while on the way thither. The fishermen near a market have two profits from the fish—the flesh and the eggs. The former is palatable if it be freed from ekin and fat before cooking. Otherwise, when heated, it gives off a most repugnant odor.

There is no reason why Americans should not have heated, it gives off a most repugnant coor.

There is no reason why Americans should not have caviar in perfection made from the roe of sturgeon caught here. It could be kept in cold storage in the original packages, either in what is called the mild form, that is, half salted, or fully salted. Instead of that most American sturgeon roe is exported, and is returned in tins or bottles under foreign labels, stale and hard and in no way comparable to that which is fresh mode.

Capt. E. 232·2·20 MINISTER'S CHILD.

HOW SHE ABUNDANTLY ATONED FOR A CARELESS ACT.

By a Special Contributor.

HEY flourished almost forty years ago, and every one on the block liked them. It soon became a neighborhood custom to observe their movements. Even the sour old lady across the street, who seldom took interest in any one but herself, always went to the window when the maid said, "Madame, they are coming." Poor, cross, rich, miserable old creature! How did it happen that she cared to watch each day for the minister and his little girl? It must have been that the tall, scholarly young man and the dancing, golden-haired child revived a gentle memory in the shriveled heart. The maid was sorry when it rained, for then there was no moment in the long day when her ill-natured mistress forgot to complain. But if the weather was pleasant, and the minister appeared, leading his daughter by the hand, the old lady forgot her bunions and discontents, until the dignified man and the sprite in a red cloak crossed the street and van-ished around the corner. It took some time for this ished around the corner. It took some time for this to happen, for the clergyman was very deliberate. Even the butterfy motions of Miss Golden Locks failed to excite his established pace. Although she dipped and fluttered, and flung spirit and color on to the sunshine, she was utterly unable to confound the moderate impulses of her companion. Thus it came to pass that the small feet fiew back and forth over the same stone flags a number of times before the corner was reached. When the hall door first opened, and the minister and his little girl came forth there was generally a skirmish. During the dangerous descent of the long, stone steps, the red mitten which held a small, rebellious hand, rashly resented the possibility of disaster. But ft was not until Golden Locks had been safely landed upon the pavement that her father resigned his mild authority, and allowed his thoughts to stray. Then, his eyes riveted upon the ground, and been safely landed upon the and allowed his thoughts resigned his mild authority, and allowed his thoughts to stray. Then, his eyes riveted upon the ground, and the child was free. Literal people wondered if the clergyman found the subjects for his powerful sermons beneath his feet. He seemed oblivious to all about him as he walked, yet within a few paces of the corner he suddenly awoke, never too late to rescue his daughter from the heels of prancing horses. Then ensued a fresh skirmish. The mitten was recaptured, and the melancholy promenade became the order of the day. Still for Golden Locks there was a sure revenge. She reskirmish. The mitten was recaptured; and the melancholy promenade became the order of the day. Still for Golden Locks there was a sure revenge. She realized her ability to dissipate selfish communion, and as she put to flight the outlines of an embryo sermon she instinctively knew that her father would soon consider overtures of peace. However, in spite of these small disagreements, the young clergyman and his spirited daughter were highly congenial. From the very first moment of Golden Locks's life, her father had felt a mysterious love for the child. Although he was very much frightened the first time he held the wee creature in his trembling arms, he never regretted the venture. When the old Irish nurse assured him that "necis-si-ty knew no law," he took hold of the queer flannel bundle, feeling so strange and awkward and happy that he knew all in a moment how full of religion and sermons the bundle was And from that very hour he knew exactly what to say to little children. He was so grave and reserved that at first boys and girls were afraid of him, but when once they had gone to church, and carried away something that was especially their own, the young minister was ever afterward a friend and oracle.

When Golden Locks was 6 years old, her father ceased to be a country parson. Then began the life I have described. The city to which the minister was called was large and smoky. Instead of living in a white cottage, surrounded by lilac bushes, that perfumed the air in the spring until the little girl declared "she smelt heaven," she peered wistfully from the thirdstory windows of a tall stone-front house on to hard parements and dwarfed trees. Still she was very happy, this little creature with yellow curls and large wondering eyes. Every one in the boarding-house loved her, and she was as gay as a pet canary in her high city cage. She had often to cease her song, and keep very still in her corner among her toys; for when her pretty, ambitious mother was away from home attending to parish duties, and her fat high city cage. She had often to cease her song, and keep very still in her corner among her toys; for when her pretty, ambitious mother was away from home attending to parish duties, and her father was busy writing a sermon, she had no one to talk to but her dolls and imaginary friends. At such times her favorite companion was Sarah Brock, the umbrella girl who lived in the corner, between the washstand and the tin water pail. Sarah was always friendly, and wonderfully jolly for a minister's umbrella. There were tin water pail. Sarah was always friendly, and won-derfully jolly for a minister's umbrella. There were days when Golden Locks was very lonely; then she would call across the room in a whisper, so as not to disturb her father, "Say, Sarah, can't you come over?" Sarah would reply in a familiar voice, "No, Mrs. Mc-Farland, it is impossible. We expect company, and I am haking a cake."

Who's coming?' inquisitive little Mrs. McFarland "Who's coming?" inquisitive little Mrs. McFarland would press, unmindful of Sarah's valuable time. An animated conversation across an imaginary fence always ensued, and at the tragic moment Miss Brock discovered that her cake was burnt to a cinder. However, such catastrophies proved trifling, for the company, including the minister and his family, conveniently failed to arrive. Each domestic embarrasment was averted by a series of providential occurrences, kindly arranged for Miss Brock.

Thus Golden Locks spent many quiet days with her student father and umbrella Sarah. The little girl was generally good, although she sometimes longed, above everything in the world, to make a noise. Then above everything in the world, to make a noise. Then she would entreat her father so pathetically to be allowed to make mouth music upon a comb covered with paper, that the gentle man agreed to the torture. Not possessing a heart hard enough to limit his daughter's remarkable repertoire, the long-suffering clergyman would finally abandon his writing. When his wife returned from her round of visits, he smiled despairingly at her questioning glance.

"My morning has been wasted," he owned, a humorous twinkle lighting his calm eyes. Then, while both parents laughed, the happy musician continued the performance upon the comb, unmindful of all but the lay of the moment. The next day Golden Locks accompanied her mother upon the round of parish duties. During the child's absence the interrupted sermon often leaped to an eloquent close. And now a great thing happened. The terrible civil war broke like an avalanche upon the anxious, expectant nation.

With the first boom of Sumter, individual ties and ambitions were sacrificed in the "twinkling of an eye." All at once into Golden Locks's young life came the knowledge of war. The city in which she lived grew wild with excitement. Soldiers marched through the streets, and bands of music played the "Star Spangled Banner" in such a wonderful way that young men rushed from their mothers and sisters and sweethearts to enlist for their country. Old men wept, because they were too old to fight for the dear Stars and Stripes, and timid women grew so brave and unselfish that a sudden glory appeared to descend upon the noisy, smoky city. Even the little children felt the enthusiasms of loyalty. Each block boasted its squhd of boy-soldiers, while little girls pleked lint for the hospitals, and held tiny house fairs. Golden Locks soon became accustomed to the sound of cannon and martial music. By the time she was 7 years old the fortunes of war had grown familiar. She had gazed with childish devotion into the face of her President, the great Lincoln. The central figure in the large window of her father's church, she declared confidently that the tall, smilling man who passed in the carriage had made a special obelsance to her small self. Who knows that he did not? At all events, the belief was a joy to Golden Locks and a more staunch patriot never lived than the minister's little girl.

Soon after this memorable Presidential tour, cannon boomed, soldiers fell, and victories and defeats frenzied the praying nation. Then the child listened to rumors of war along the hand a device hand a device excitement was at its height only women and children were permitted to leave the city. For Golden Locks the time was full of ignorant, imaginative interest. She failed to understand her father's poor qualifications for war, and thought only of the flags, music and processions, and most of all of the visit she was about to pay her grandimother. The minister had decided, in his quiet, unselfish way, to send his family to a distant part of the State. It would soon be midsummer, the usual time for his vacation, and contrary to the enteraties of his anxious wife, he believed it best that she and Golden Locks should go from the city at once. So the plan was soon settled upon, and the very next day Golden Locks expected to start for her grandmother's. She was entrefated to be good, and allowed to do much as she chose through the last busy hours. To the active child time hung heavily. She was excitable, and possessed a vivid imagination. Before the day was over she had done a shocking thing.

Soon after this memorable Presidential tour, cannon boomed, soldiers fell, and victories and defeats frenzied the praying nation. Then the child listened to rumors of war close at hand. A daring band of rebels, headed by the dauntless scout, Morgan, were approaching the city from the opposite side of the Ohio River, so said the morning papers. Wild commotion prevailed at once. Fortifications were thrown up and home recruits pressed into service, regardles of calling. While the excitement was at its height only women and children were permitted to leave the city. For Golden Locks the time was full of ignorant, imaginative interest. She failed to understand her father's poor qualifications for war, and thought only of the flags, music and pro-

The afternoon was very suitry, and her mother was busy packing the trunks. Her father was absorbed in sorting out the best of his sermons, having decided to send them away; in case the city should be bembarded and burned. Golden Locks amused herself by building a camp in the corner, in imitation of Camp Douglas, which she had visited several times. She made rows of tents out of newspaper, and was hard at work drilling a company of tin soldlers, when it occurred to her that the imaginary arrival of Morgan would be highly entertaining. Why the little girl was tempted so far beyond the usual bounds of mischief is hard to decide. For somiq hunaccountable reason her paugity hand stretched out cautiously, and deliberately captured one of her father's best sermons. The scisors did the rest. The manuscripts piled about the floor in attractive, even piles gave no sign that one of their number had been purloined. Before Golden Locks had realized her in warriors. Morgan, the raider, had arrived. The child's cheeks flushed with excitement, wh

The next day, when she kissed her father good-by, she felt as sorry as ever, but determined to try all summer to be good and helpful, and thus secure a full forgiveness. As the train glided out of the station, the golden haired little penitent, with face pressed to the window, never suspected that the minister saw before him a powerful text for a new sermon.

And now comes the strange part of our story. Morgan never attacked the city. He crossed the river with his band at a point farther up, and after wandering almlessly about for a number of days, he realized that he was being hotly pursued, and endeavored to make his escape through the very village in which Golden Locks's grandmother lived. One afternoon a horseman galloped wildly down the long main street, crying to the panic-stricken people that "Morgan and his men were at hand." Wild rumors flew from house to house. Like marie family horses disanneared in the neighboring woods, and sliver spoons went underground, in some cases never to reappear. Then suddenly a great dust was seen at the top of the hill, and the clatter of iron hoofs almost stopped the hearts of the simple-minded villagers. Morgan was coming! Morgan was upon them.

The situation was stirring, fraught with doubt and expectation. Even grandma, straining her eyes to see behind the terrible dust, for once in her life forgot precious Golden Locks. A moment later, when every one thought of the child, she was nowhere to be found. Then came the misery of a fruitless search, while almost immediately the rebels galloped into the town. Like grasshoppers they swarmed the very houses. Soiled and hungry, the men demanded bread and pies. And all through that exciting time no one could find little Golden Locks. The household was in a panic. All felt that the "rebs" might have everything, now that the child was gone. It is impossible to describe those miserable moments, but at last there was joy! For safe and sound under the high-posted bedstead in the darkened guest-chamber Aunt Mary spied her lost darling. She was fast asleep, her golden head pillowed upon a pile of her father's precious sermons. The little girl had tugged them out of the trunk and hidden them from the rebels beneath the innocent dimity valance of her grandmother's great mahogany hed. Those sermons had been sent away for safe keeping, and as it turned out, the little penitent was the only one to remember them in the day of impending disaster.

There is little more to tell. In less than an hour our boys in blue came trooping after Morgan. Grandma and Aunt Mary and Golden Locks's mother baked biscuit and pancakes for the hungry Union men until every particle of flour in the house was gone. Then the pursuers sped on after Morgan. Three miles from the village a skirmich took place, and the reckless the village a skirmish took place, and the reckless raider and his entire band were captured without difficulty. A week later Golden Locks's father joined his family. When the good man strove upon his knees to regain his sermons, still hidden beneath the great bed, his face was lit with rare happiness. The tinge of rubles shone upon his cheeks, and .wo crystal drops fell from his eyes and rolled beneath the valance as he deliberately drew forth his manuscripts.

U. S. GRANT'S GUEST.

A SON OF ERIN WHO HUNG HIS CLOTHES ON THE GARDEN WALL.

To the home of the Grants, in San Diego, there came one morning a tramp. The worst of his kind-in rags and tags. On he came over the grounds, where waving palms, graceful pepper trees, and roses made the place a paradise; past the great columns of the frone entrance-past the dining-room windows, at which the juvenile Grants were watching him with round-eved wonder. At last he ranged up to the kitchen window, where Sing Lee, the "chef," confronted him with angry oblique eyes, and bristling pigtail, flourishing at him oblique eyes, and bristling pigtail, flourishing at him a saucepan and a jargon of Chinese words. "Chee muchee no Melican man. Washee! Savey! Washee, washee!" And then the son of the Emerald Isle hurled back with prompness, a fusillade of anathemas at the irate cook for refusing a "gintleman a boite to ate!" Finally persauded, however, that the "boite" was not forthcoming, the unwelcome individual leisurely took himself back to the hydrant at the front of the house, where he proceeded to divest himself of some outer garments and "washee" them. Soon, on the low stone wall surrounding the grounds was a mottey array, of socks, shirts, and sundry articles spread to dry, which footpassengers were viewing with ill-concealed curiosity. Presently around the corner came Col. Grant, in his uniform, as he had just returned from the barracks. "Hello!" said the astonished colonel under his breath, as the strange figure in the midst of the foreign-looking as the strange figure in the midst of the foreign-looking mass of color flashed on his vision. And as he grasped the situation, a gleam of amusement leaped into his eyes, and over his face broke a broad smile as he looked up and saw the dismayed faces of his family at the window, and, advancing quickly, he addressed his self-invited guest: "Good morning, my man," with a mannerism so akia to another, known and loved by a nation. Poor Paddy did not know, but catching sight of the brass buttons on the colonel's uniform he bounded to his feet and began to exclaim in wild frenzy, evidently taking them for a policeman's accounterments; but having made the man to understand that no harm should come to him, and that he should be left unmolested to finish his "job" (for the colonel had waved way the gardener, who was intent on expunging "the tout ensemble" from the grounds,) the gracious host asked the tramp if he were hungry. At which the Irishman became eloquent, and waving violently a piece of scarlet cloth which he held in his hand, cried out: "Bedad, me back and me stomach is growed fast." The colonel waited to hear no more, but went with alacrity to the kitchen and ordered a good breakfast for his uncanny guest, giving it to him with his own hands.

In due time Pat departed with a conglomeration of blessings and blarney on his host, muttering audibly: "May the holy Virgin kape him. Shure he must be St. Patrick in 'bootons.' Bedad. Begora. Hooray!" of the brass buttons on the colonel's uniform he bounded Early the next morning the preacher mounted his mule and trotted down the road, meaning to pass through the camp to show his contempt for the "rebels." He was a very old man, with a stern face and long, white beard, which, taken with his white hair, gave him an appearance decidedly patriarchal. "Hullo, fellows, here comes Father Abraham!" called one soldier to a comrade on the opposite hill, as the old man rode between them.

A Story of Dewey.

N OCCASIONAL correspondent of the News Letter, at present in Manila, tells the following story illustrating the kind heart of the great admiral:

"While talking to Admiral Dewey one day on the quarterdeck of his flagship, Olympia, in Manila Bay, a feminine voice interrupted our conversation, crying out in a very sweet way, 'Admiral, Admiral!' The in a very sweet way, 'Admiral, Admiral!' The sound seemed to come from the direction of the water over the side of the big cruiser. The admiral arose, and walking to the railing, responded, 'Hello, little Marie,' to an extremely pretty Filipino fruit girl paddling about in her native 'dug out.' She pitched up in a characteristic girl fashion several 'chicos,' a very delicious native fruit. 'Thank you, Marie. Don't give me so many;' and turning to the marine on sentry duty, said: 'Here, sentry, you see some are bought from her,' at the same time handing him a coin. The admiral told the story of how the insurgents stopped her from selling her fruit around at the various ships in the bay, and that upon relating her grievance to the admiral, he promptly issued an order to the effect that she be allowed to go and come whenever and wherever she pleased, and that she be protected from any interference."—[San Francisco News Letter.

real are sometimes connected in dreams. I had an experience down at Tampa, while we were waiting for orders to go to Cuba, which was remarkable in its way. One night, after trying for several hours to go to sleep in my tent, I went outside to see if there was a breath of fresh air to be had. Near the tent there was a rough bench, which had been built for card playing. It was about three feet from the ground and was just wide enough for a man to lie down on.

"I walked over to the bench, and, stretching out on it, was soon asleep. I dreamed that I was standing in a Spanish camp surrounded by hundreds of excited Spaniards, who were insisting that I be shot at once for a spy. I was perfectly cool and had a supreme indifference about my fate. They took me over to a stake driven in the ground and tied me up to it. Then they wheeled up an enormous cannon to within fifty feet of where I stood and aimed it straight at me. I saw the gunner selze the lanyard and look around at the officer in charge for a command to fire. Then I closed my eyes. The next moment there was a tremendous roar.

"The cannon ball struck me squarely on the side of the right hip, and I flew up into the air. I woke to find myself on the ground, where I had rolled from the bench. There was a sharp pain in my right hip, and, looking out into the open space beyond the tent, I saw that the morning gun had just been fired. The smoke was still hanging over the cannon. The pain in my hip was caused by its coming in contact with a stake driven in the ground near the bench.

"Several weeks later at San Juan I got, a bullet in my right hip where the cannon ball of the dream struck and directly in the center of the bruise left by my forcible contact with the stake when I rolled off the bench."—[Washington Star.

The general doubted the existence of such an outpost and expressed his opinion that the worthy scout had been in Manila on a drunk. Buck asked for twenty-four hours to substantiate his report and was granted it. The next day, as Jackson was galloping along at the head of his regiment, under orders to attack a given point, Kelly rode after him in a state of great excitement, and Jackson, supposing that he carried most important orders, halted the whole commands. Kelly rode up and said to the expectant colonel, 'Did you find my pipe?' Jackson burst into a roar of profanity, ordered the regiment forward, and to ride over Kelly if he did not get out of the way, saying to the colonel, that he might go to a very warm place and smoke his blamed old pipe to his heart's content.—[Chicago Inter Ocean.

How a Horse Made Two Prisoners.

E ARE indebted to the Buffalo Horse World for a most interesting account of how a horse in our civil war made two prisoners. Sheridan was in the Shenandoah Valley and confronting him, Gen. Jubal Early with a large force of Confederate cavalry. A magnificent horse was brought into the Union camp, and Maj. Oscar L. Teachout of our cavalry appropriated him. In a charge made a few days later the horse took the bits in his teeth and carried the major in spite of all his efforts a prisoner into the Conmajor in spite of all his efforts a prisoner into the Confederate camp. Here the horse was appropriated by a Confederate colonel, and a little later, in another engagement, took the bits in his teeth, as before, and brought the colonel in spite of all his efforts into Sheridan's camp. So the horse made a Union major and a Confederate colonel prisoners of war.—[Our Dumb Animals.

DATIENCE will accomplish wonders in the way of training dumb animals. and milk. At an adjacent factory a large bell is rung every morning, noon and night, and at the first sound of the bell the turtles know it is time to eat, and they scurry toward the kitchen steps.

They have been taught a number of tricks. The most intricate is a remarkable color test. Long pieces of different colored yarn are tacked on the fence within reach of the turtles. At the word of command one of them will go to the fence and pull down any color that is called for by the trainer. They also insist upon coming into the kitchen during a rainstorm, and the little fellows, who cannot mount the steps, poke out their heads and give voice to a peevish, shrill bark, until they are also brought under shelter.—[Philadelphia Record.

An Army Mule.

WAS at Tampa when a negro teamster was instantly killed by an army mule, and it furnished a good illustration of the wonderful memory that a mule has.

"The negro teamster used to pound that mule unmercifully. Instead of using strategy and coaxing his mule into submission, he used to beat it hard enough to kill a horse. Well, for two months the teamster didn't drive that mule. But the mule never forgot him. He never made any attempt to injure his new driver, who knew enough to treat him decently. But one day the old teamster came back. The mule remembered him. He waited with as much docility and patience as an ox until he was harnessed, and then, when the old teamster was off his guard, he let fly with both heels, caught that negro in the pit of the stomach and stretched him out as dead as a hammer. The other teamster was standing right there by him, but that mule didn't make any attempt to kick him. Interview With a King,

N EX-MINISTER to Greece from this country, Mr. A Fern, recently told a story to illustrate the simplicity of manners in the court at Athens

Commodore -, then captain of the United States navy, was a few years ago in command of a warship at Athens. He was an extremely modest, shy man, who avoided all society but that of the family of the Minister, who had long been his friends. One day he came in, and with a look of annoyance produced a card stamped with the royal arms.

"King George has asked me to dinner!" he said. "Such nonsense! What shall I do at a royal banquet!" "You will enjoy the dinner," his friends said. "King George is a man worth knowing, on or off a throne."
"Well, I can't go. I'll decline. I have another engagement."
"That does not matter. You must go. A royal invitation is a command."

The captain grumbled, but his friends laughed. "Come and tell us about the banquet when it is over," they said.

The morning after the dinner the captain appeared with a beaming countenance. "I am amazed!" he said. "I was ushered into a parlor where a pleasant, intelligent-looking man was sitting, with one child on his knee and another beside him. He shook hands as cordially as any American gentleman would have done. "These are my children," he said. "We are telling riddles. Can you guess riddles, captain?" "We told riddles and then played games. The fun almost degenerated into a romp. The little Princess sat on my knee, and when dinner was announced and the children were dismissed, they clung to me and begged me to come again. If all royalties are like these, there is nothing in them to be afraid of or to dislike."

Halstead was armed with many fine introductory letters, but decided to rely mainly on one given him by Thomas Ewing, Sherman's brother-in-law. He found the general at a little railroad town in Kentucky, pacing uneasily to and fro in front of headquarters tent, his great mind revolving some critical plan of campaign. Halstead advanced and presented Ewing's letter. The general opened it somewhat impatiently, read a few lines, folded it, and said: "Ah, you come from Ewing; and you desire to have 'all the latest news'—the 'next probable move' of our army—eh? Well, there is a train leaving this town for Cincinnati at 2 o'clock. Here, take this ticket, and step over there and get your dinner—and then get on that train." "Well, but, Gen. Sherman"—began the newspaper man, hoping to reopen the case; but Sherman waved him off, "Go over and get a good dinner; we have plenty, and always strive to treat our friends well—but be sure you don't miss that 2 o'clock train!" Anecdote of Heureaux.

Some years ago a conspiracy headed by several prominent young man of the Santo Domingo Republic who hoped to gain wealth and position through the death of Heureaux, attempted to take his life and start a revolution. Their plot was cleverly planned and seemingly sure of success, for the President showed no suspicions, continuing his customary mode of life, walking and driving throughout the city as usual without guards, although at that time he was fully posted in every detail of their scheme, and when their plans were fully matured and their time for action at hand he had them all arrested and thrown into the dungeous of the old fortifications.

As they did so only one man fell.

The President, who was a witness, then stepped forward and said: "My children, you have attempted to ruin your country and take my life, and for this you are legally subject to death, but I do not want to see you die so young. The removing of tan is the least important of its accomplishments. It removes blotches, pimples, moth and liver patches, and restores the clear, transparent beauty of youth.

All physicians and dermatologists agree on one point-that when the outer cuticle is stained with freckles, tan and other discolorations, or has a muddy, roughened appearance, there is but one way to eradicate the defects, and that is by using a preparation that will surely, but not too burriedly, take off the outer skin and with it the blemishes.

It Would Make Him Too Popular,

It came about in this way: Mr. Wortham was in this store one day, buying a present for a mem-ber of his family, when he noticed a showcase filled with splendid jeweled revolvers with silver and gold grips and chased barrels, having precious stones set into the butts.

"Lemme see one of those guns," he said to the clerk

The Texan took it tenderly in both hands and held it admiringly up to the light. Then, drawing himself up to his full height, which was six feet and a half, he rested the revolver barrel upon his left elbow, crooked for the purpose, and looked over the sights down the long store. THE MASTER-WORKMAN. A LAEOR-DAY DISCOURSE.

By Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D.,

Bishop of Central New York, Syracuse, N. Y.

"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."-[St. John, v, 17. LONG with the dignity of man you hear, and now adays hear often, of the dignity of labor. You A like to hear of it because you are workingmen, You are glad to have your work lifted into honor, and yourselves with it. And, my friends, you can be raised to honor in no other way.

Shall we say that man is a working animal? Better than that, he is working brain, working will, working conscience, working heart of faith and love, all in one. Whatever in you lives, lives by action. Whatever in you is inactive is the dying part. Life and labor are correlated. The labor questions, then, are vital ques-tions. They are not surface questions, or party questions, or questions of a day, or questions of passion. They reach high and wide and deep. They are per-plexing in their difficulty and awful in their greatness,

They reach high and wide and deep. They are perplexing in their difficulty and awful in their greatness, for the very reason that lissor is life.

Yes, fearful questions, but the question whether labor is a blessing or a curse is not one of them. It is a curse only when there is something horribly wrong about it, wrong in the man that does it, wrong in the man that does it, wrong in the man that at the states it. "Get us rid of work" will never be the watchword of a noble reform. Even the reduction of work would be a secondary good. Thousands of tired and sleepless capitalists would, be thankful to even their hours of labor with their workmen at the factory or railway, in the forge, the mine, the field. It was the Master Workman, looking with tender and gracious sympathy on all the workshops of the world, the great Capitalist, owning all the kingdoms, yet the Servant who washed the feet of the doubter, the denier and the traitor, who silenced his accusers by the lofty confession, "My Father worketh, and I work." A release from labor saves no soul, makes no man manly, no woman womanly. In high mansions and low saloons, at the top and the bottom of the city of much rotten wealth and much reckless poverty, laziness damns a great many in this world and the world to come. That is one of the first words of Christianity.

If you ask for direct precepts, "Six days shalt thou labor," "Work while the day lasts," "Let him that stole steal no more, but labor," "Study to be quiet, and to do your own business," "If a man will not work, neither shall he eat." The question being, why all this work? there might be several answers—necessity, a livelihood, health, accumulation, public influence, power. It is here answered by one who only knows all that is in man. He says, man must be a working man because shof are as it will recognize social classes at all, it takes their side. Born itself in Jesus Christ under the breath of cattle, bred in a carpenter's cottage, a companion of saliors and field hands, choosing tentmakers and fis for the very reason that labor is life.

Yes, fearful questions, but the question whether labor beauty.

Be patient; there is no surer sign of reserved, manly strength. Work with the working God, whose patience is His most wondrous attribute. There is an element of time in every true reformation. "He that believeth shall not make hasto." Notice the unburried movement of the astronomic system. Law nowhere lets go its hold. Even where all seems most casual and irregular, in the meteors as much as in the suns, in the comets whose wild visits, the mathematical astronomers say, may be 300,000 centuries apart, reaches the upholding arm of law. You young citizens of the republic can do your country no better service than to set yourselves squarely country no better service than to set yourselves squarely against the perilous drift of insubordination—the false construction of the ambiguous maxim that "the best government is that which governs least.

The nation never forgets to celebrate its independence, but it has no festival in its calendar for the blessings of order. Here is the fit mission of Labor day. Say what we will of the self-satisfied glorying of independence, there is a higher glory yet—the glory of intelligent, willing, principled obedience where obedience is due. The first want of any society of men is to own a will above its highest heads. Agony and blood have had to drill it into the understanding of most peoples, as God's finger drilled it into the stone tables at Mt. Sinal, that no man or nation is fit to command that has not learned to obey. We shall have broken contracts, and contracts that only scounlrels could ever have signed, fugitive bondsmen and successful swindlers, banks robbed from without and robbed from within, thievish trustees of orphan houses, bribable juries and merchants bankrupt of everything also but money, wherever men and women do not believe in a rectitude that they cannot buy or sell, in a worship which is not a breeze of fine sentiment or a pageant for the eye, in a church which is not an insurance office for private salvation or a club for entertainment, but the law-educated and law-honoring body of a Master-Christ, and in a God who will by no means clear the guilty. "I am not come to destroy the law, but to fill it full." Put them in mind to obey magistrates, kings, governors, whatever the ordained and constitutional "powers" may be, for "they are God's ministers for that very thing."

I urge you, workingmen who have rights to gain may be, for "they are God's ministers for that very thing."

I urge you, workingmen who have rights to gain and freedom to preserve—"so speak ye and so act as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." You may say that certain laws are unjust, that they protect tyrannical corporations and discriminate in favor of the rich, and that may be true. But, thank heaven, that you live in a country where laws are made and mended by the people. You are of the people. Educate yourselves to exercise your right to conform the law of the land to the law of Christ.

Let intelligent workmen who work for wages make a candid study of the actual condition, methods, aims, profits and losses of the masters of the particular industry in which they are employed. Let the employer give an equally candid hearing to half a dozen of the best operatives in his employ, while both are in good temper. Each party will learn a great deal, seeing the absurdity and mischief of its mistakes. Nothing is plainer to observers at a little distance than that the antagonists in these recent labor struggles are fighting in the dark, striking with blind strokes, which hit friends along with foes and are often suicidal—a pathetic repetition of a thousand tragedies where man has killed or mutilated his fellow-man for lack of knowing who the fellow-man was and what he meant. The two "classes" are suffering piteously for want of a mutual introduction and interpretation, though they may live close together, serve the same establishment, and really depend on each other's good will.

A conscientious employer of a hundred hands said to me the other day, by his own fireside, with unaffected grief: "I have been losing money rapidly for five years, doing my best; I must be impoverished, wind up this business and put out the fires of this foundry, or else give the men, for a time at least, less wages; after a while I might do better by them; I actually run the concern now as much to keep them and their families from starvation as from any expectation of profit

Why would they not believe him? It is a world of why would they not believe him? It is a world of vicarious suffering; very likely it was because employers of less heart, shutting their mouths and opening their pockets, refuse to take even their foremen into their confidence. When will classes learn Christ's simple lesson in the political economy of His heavenly kingdom—that in the long run the interest of one is the interest of all, and that the world was made by heaven on that plan?

Neither the philosophy of Hebrer was at Poussey.

Neither the philosophy of Hobbes nor of Rousseau can keep a permanent hold of any people under the sun. Society is not a cunning balance of self-interests or a see-saw of competing ups and downs, nor is war the normal state of nations or neighbors. National greatness will come of obedience to this law especially; that what is best for all the parts is best for the whole, and what is best for the whole is best for all the parts. That was a very sagacious sentence which the Master Workman of the Knights of Labor recently wrote: "If the theory that the men who own capital are our enemies were true, then the workman of today would be the enemy of his fellow-toiler on the morrow; for after all it is how to acquire capital, and how to use it properly, that we are endeavoring to learn."

Suppose a capitalist, whose capital is invested in a erly, that we are endeavoring to learn."

Suppose a capitalist, whose capital is invested in a manufactory where a village of the workmen's families has grown up about him, makes their welfare in every line his personal and enthusiastic care, their dwellings, their schools, their playgrounds, reading-room, library, holidays, churches, food, water, health, drainage—who doubts that in any pinch or outbreak the human spirit would triumph over any temporary discontent by these "fair humanities of old religion?" It is not so much the "times" that are "hard" as the hearts of men and women, whether petrified by avarice or trodden down by oppression.

"Man," says Lamartine, "never yet fastened one end of a chain around the neck of his brother that God's own hand did not fasten the other end round the neck of his oppressor." It will be hard to find any social dislocation not curable by the New Testament rule:

"Let no man seek (exclusively) his own, but every man (also) another's wealth." Call it Utopianism, call it altruism, call it impractical theory, it is at any rate Christianity. We challenge the objector to find a spot on the earth where it has ben tried without the harmonizing of discord, the abatement of crime, the increase of thrift, contentment, economy and every virtue, the royal growth of individual freedom and public peace, and what are these but the coming of the New Democracy, grander than any Utopia or New Atlantis, in these later days on these western shores?

Carry up all your dealing with this large question to that highest height where your Lord lifted it, and hold it there. "My father worketh, and I work." After all, and at the last, the capital-and-labor question is not of property, but of character, on both its sides; not all, and at the last, the capital-and-labor question is not of property, but of character, on both its sides; not of money, but of manhood. It is the old question between money and right; and it never was and never can be solved by a faithless materialism, but only by something greater in man which makes him one of the sons of God. Strive and hope for the time to come when, by school and church, citizens will be trained who are fit to be capitalists, fit to organize and lead industry, manly enough to respect their workmen and deal honorably with their imperfections. The masters of industries must be masters of themselves, of ideas. deal honorably with their imperfections. The masters of industries must be masters of themselves, of ideas, and of human sympathies. Till the world's business is done with genuine manliness and a lofty spirit it will be done with hitches and botches, strikes, panics, reactions, failures. Strikes and boycotts are symptoms. Behind the disorder is disease. Empirical treatment may deal with specific eruptions, but for social health in the body of the commonwealth nothing can avail in the long run but personal character strong with those three elements that are familiar as pledges to your lips three elements that are familiar as pledges to your lips-"temperance, reverence, purity." You know the satio of the Socialist, "Christianity has nothing to say to the modern world with all its injustices, inequalities are wrongs, its unpaid seamstresses, overworked laborer overfed capitalists—nothing but two commonplaces—almsgiving for the rich, resignation for the poor. Yes, one kind of Christianity possibly; but not the Christianity emboded and alive in Him who is the Master Workman of mankind, proclaiming, "My father worketh hitherto, and I work," or in his legitimate followers who say by word and deed, "No man liveth to himself."

ers who say by word and deed, "No man liveth to himself."

Would you have capital what capital ought to be, Christianize it! It is vain for employer's to beg the policeman's club or pistol to quell riots and guard their houses if they build those houses on unrighteous profits, on skeletons and tears. Two prosperous and active merchants were sitting at dinner. "Why," one asked the other, "do you keep on at work in your business? You have enough." "Yes," was the answer, "but I have costly tastes, more and more costly, which I want to indulge. But who do you?" "Because," was the other's better answer, "though I could retire tomorrow and live in the same style, I should lose my opportunity to hold constant intercourse with workingmen whom I can help." The "living touch of man by man," the lifegiving touch of heart by heart.

So, too, would you have labor what labor ought to be, Christianize it! It is vain for employers to beg the employed man's children are "crying for bread," if their fathers and mothers are crying for beer and rum, or hungering for wealth which they will not earn. Take care when you have got your eight hours of work instead of ten what you do with the two you have gained. They will be not gain, but loss, if you give them not to your mind but to your appetite, not to the refining of your homes by tastes that are clean, but to the vulgarizing of them by dissipations that are coarse and foul.

I think we can better even the German philosopher's (Fitchte's) noble prediction. "Christianity." he says.

I think we can better even the German philosopher's (Fitchte's) noble prediction. "Christianity," he says, "is yet destined to become the organizing power of the State; and then it will yield the fullness of its blessings to the world." Better say that will happen when Christianity has gone as a quickening and controlling power into the hearts and consciences of those who do the world's work, and so make States the best that States can be.

LAY SERMONS.

HE way of life sometimes grows hard. Like Bunyan's Pilgrim we cannot escape the Hill Difficulty. It lies straight in our path to the Celestial City. It is not always builded of great, massive obstacles, but its heights are reared from the little things of life. is these which sap our strength and our courage, which wear out our patience and vex our hopes.

Cheerfulness should be the ruling passion of the Christian, but poor, blind human nature does not always see the bright side of things; it looks at the shadows; it dwells upon its disappointments, until it gets away down into the Valley of Doubt and Fear, instead of walking upon the heights where the light of God's love shines and where we might walk with Him forevermore.

But even with this Hill Difficulty before us, if we are courageous and strong, Faith will come to us on her shining wings, and taking us by the hand will lighten our steps and lead us to the grand hilltop, and the broad, high levels of peace. The little worries of life will slip from us and cease to vex us, for above them all we shall see the smile of our Savieur, and feel the warm and tender light of His love all about us. He does not wish us to walk in the darkness with Doubt and Fear for our companions, but His word to us ie "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say unto you rejoice." God would not demand the impossible of us. We may "rejoice in the Lord always" if we are His. If we do not, the fault is our own. We do not live as "seeing Him who is invisible;" we do not take hold upon His promises and apply them to our own needs, and so the Hill Difficulty grows higher and steeper before us, and clouds of doubt lower which hide from us the face of Our Father. And it is only when we see His face that we walk and are glad, always climbing higher and nearer to Him.

One of the great needs of the Christian life is frequent prayer. He who is not a praying Christian is not a lighten our steps and lead us to the grand hilltop, and climbing higher and nearer to Him.

One of the great needs of the Christian life is frequent prayer. He who is not a praying Christian is not a growing Christian, nor is he a happy Christian. Frequent communion with God is what the soul needs. Assome writer has said: "Blessings that are promised in response to faith-filled prayer cannot be expected if faith-filled prayer is not offered." "Ask and ye shall receive," is God's word to us, but if we do not ask how can we hope that He will give?

How truly has it been said "Dutles are ours, results are God's," and we know that God never goes back on His promises, and we shall never ask for His blessing without receiving it if we ask aright.

The world's greatest men have always been Christian men, believers in prayer. In speaking of this nation's wonderful victories during the Spanish war, Admiral Dewey said last May: "It is strange that we have wrested an empire from these people—Spanlards—with the loss of only a few men. I am a Christian man and I say most assuredly that it was the hand of God. I remember, when we engaged the fleet, seeing shells flying directly at us, and I do not understand under heaven why we escaped, unless it was through divine superintendence."

We cannot question that it was through this. Our Father had heard the prayers lifted to Him from the ship's deck, from the thousands of homes and churches in this great Christian land of ours, and He guided the bursting shell that it should not harm those who had sought His protecting care.

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath, The Christian's native atr.

His watchword at the gate of death,

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,

The Christian's native air.

The Christian's native air.

His watchword at the gate of death,
He opens heaven by prayer."

Let us pray then without ceasing, as we climb the Hill Difficulty, as we reach the wide, high levels beyond it; wherever we tread let us rejoice in that we have in prayer the key to heaven, the key which will unlock for us the richest blessings of God's love and care. With this we never need fear; nor let our hearts be troubled, for we may have the joy of God's presence and the blessings of His love and peace.

White Room for a Young Girl.

X C. C.: You write me that you wish to furnish and decorate a room for your young and decorate a toyou this autumn after daughter, who returns to you this autumn after several years of absence. I quite appreciate that you wish to make her own particular habitation as attractive as possible; that your idea, in fact, is to have something strikingly unique, appropriate to girlhood, and of inexpensive simplicity; why not, then, have for her a white room? An advantage that a white room has over others, aside from its charming suggestion of purity, simplicity and freshness, is that each month this freshness may be renewed to its pristine beauty with the help of a laundryman.

It is a great advantage to you that you have a long It is a great advantage to you that you have a long window opening to the floor on to an upper porch. By a little management you can render this window highly ornamental. There is nothing which adds to, or detracts from, the beauty of a room more than the way in which daylight is admitted into it. Have you not often entered a room, beautifully furnished, with rich and even artistic furniture, and yet the garish way in which the light shone into it made it positively ugly? When light is allowed to pour indiscriminately into a room, it destroys the effect of your richest brica-brac, it renders hard and common-looking your handsomest furniture. There are no half-tones, semi-shadows, to melt the coloring of one beautiful object into another.

I am distinctly not an advocate of dark rooms, and I think the day when callers etumbled into dark parlors with close-drawn blinds has passed; but I wish to urge discretion in the use of light; modify and tone it softly until it lends an indescribable charm to every object in the room. Use for this the faculty you employ in hanging an oil painting, and you will be successful.

You will realize, perhaps, after this preamble, how of more than ordinary importance it is to regulate the light of a white room. Therefore, I advise your hanging a Venetian blind, of a pale green tint, between the long window and its white muslin curtains. This can be drawn up or down at will, and its elats can be turned at pleasure, and it will, with your awning, render the room deliciously attractive at all hours of the day.

On your floor have tacked tightly, and with absolute smoothness, white canvas. To make an effective filling it must be most carefully sewed in the seams, and stretched on the floor by a professional hand. This sort of floor covering I have seen most satisfactorily used for a year at a time, in a white-and-gold reception-room, so that with careful usage I think you need not he sitate of the careful usage I think you need not he sitate of the careful was easily wined off of it with of floor covering I have seen most satisfactorily used for a year at a time, in a white-and-gold reception-room, so that with careful usage I think you need not hesitate to employ it. Spots can be easily wiped off of it with gasoline, and as your house is furnace-heated, there will be no danger of soot from the fireplace. Lay white fur rugs on this, placing one beside the bed and one in front of the dressing-table.

Curtain your windows, and drape your dressing-table with sheer white organdy, tying with small white silk cords and tassels, as white ribbons are apt to give a funereal look. A handsome half-canopy bed of white enamel will drape beautifully with the muslin. Have a balance around your spread, which falls just one inch from the floor, under it use a spread of white sateen.

Be very careful in buying, to get a white which is as distinctly removed from a blue-white as it is from a cream. Clear, dead white in muslin and sateen is the right thing. Have the wicker furniture carefully done in white enamel, and tie cushions of white china silk or fine embroidered linen in them

If your daughter's toilet articles are in ivory and silver, so much the better. A pair of candlesticks (holding wax candles,) in cut-glass or silver, add much to a white dressing-bureau. Let the electric-light fixtures be carired out in the metal you have used for other things, and have the lamps to them of ground glass.

And now to a most important point—your walls. I

And now to a most important point—your walls. I saw recently a paper of a velvety white finish, with a daisy in dull gold sprinkled over it at wide intervals. It was, in fact, a ceiling-paper, but would be beautiful for the side walls of your room. Carry it up to the white picture-molding (of course, all of the woodwork in this room is white,) and from the molding over the ceiling have a wash of paint—green. This will reproduce the light coming through your Venetian blind. You may not know that the reflections of green are always rosy, so I will reassure you in case you are afraid of having your room too cold in tone.

I would by all means place a luxuirant maiden-hair fern on a light stand by the window, and under the awning outside hang a fern basket. A palm or two in tubs on your upper porch would look well from the window. And now to a most important point-your walls.

As I have given so much space to your first question, will reserve my answer to the others for another paper.

Anonymous: You ask about pillows for beds. The three-quarter size is the most popular in square pillows, and these are used quite as frequently as the long, round bolster. A brass bed, having the round bolster, looks best with a color under the muslin or lace cover. In this case many draw the spread up over the bolster, but I like best to see the bolster covered separately, but with precisely the same material as that used for covers. This can be drawn together in a rosette at each end of the bolster, and it is a matter of taste whether this is finished with a tassel.

I have seen very beautiful brass beds, with covers made of the shadow-silk which is manufactured by the

I have seen very beautiful brass beds, with covers made of the shadow-slik which is manufactured by the Associated Artists of New York. There are colors in this silk which tone in most beautifully with brass. These spreads, you will understand, are made with a valance (deep ruffle) around three sides of them. Personally, a purely white bed appeals to me most, with two dainty white pillows upon it. Of course, the valanced spread cannot be used with a French bedstead or any one where the covers have to be tucked in.

The wrought iron finish for fixtures and hardware is considered extremely artistic, and is often used in the handsomest houses. Sash windows are as much in vogue as ever where they are needed to soften the light, to keep out inquisitive eyes, or where the shape of the window seems to call for them.

F. E. S.: I am very sorry that I cannot give you much help about your wall-paper. You say that you have papered over cheesecloth and the paper has cracked. I have consulted various decorators, and they all say that cheesecloth has not body enough to take papering. It will sag, and eventually crack the paper. The only thing I can recommend is to cut it along the bottom, draw it down tightly, and tuck it securely to a fresh strip before repapering. It would be much better, however, to take the cheesecloth off entirely and put on a stronger cotton goods.

R. M.: If the view from your window is so unsightly that you would like to shut it out entirely, I would advise you to have a lattice-work screen built a few feet from the window; paint this green, and then train some beautiful vine over it. You will find it makes a pretty effect. On the outside of your east window, which you say is a wide double one, opening nearly to the floor, have your carpenter build you some window boxes, and in these plant bright-colored flowers that will bloom against the panes in winter and look in at you through the open window in summer.

I have been so glad to note within the last few years that so many are copying the London fashion of window boxes—of delicious bloom within their balconies. Tus happy custom gives an air of cheerful refinement to the plainest house.

I do not think that the azalea is yet sufficiently appreciated here as a window decoration, but it may be that it does not bloom in Southern California in the necessor.

I do not think that the azalea is yet sufficiently appreciated here as a window decoration, but it may be that it does not bloom in Southern California in the necessary profusion and perfection. I shall never forget the beauty of one of these plants as I saw it once, an immense mass of airy pink bloom against the small, leaded panes of a high casement window. The woodwork of the window sill was black, and the pot in which the azalea grew was of oriental design, and it seemed to shed an oriental beauty over that portion of the room in which it stood.

shed an oriental beauty over that portion of the room in which it stood.

A Further Window Decoration.

There is a great fad lately among decorators for using flowers and plants in a prim and arbitrary way. To many more people this will suggest Kate Greenaway more than it will Italian gardening. It is very effective, nevertheless, and a row of lime trees in tubs can be made to carry out a very charming design in an interior by having your nurseryman trim them to perfect balls on top of one long stem. It is necessary, of course, that these stems should be absolutely straight, and there must be complete uniformity in the trees.

You may not know that scarlet geraniums can also be treated in this way, and if properly trimmed will become a round mass of scarlet bloom. A row of these so trained, placed in flower-pots against a casement window, would amply repay you for the trouble of training them.

Marletta: If you have used the Delft blues in your bedroom, I would cover the floor first with a rather dark, though clear, blue filling, then lay on this rugs of the blue and white Japanese wool. These rugs have a great deal of white in them, and are beautiful when lying on the dark blue of the filling. For your windows you can get India silk, in blue, Chinese-looking figures on a white ground, or you can use the Chinese cotton crepe. It is brought in beautiful blue and white designs. You should tie these back with white cords and tassels.

Modern Decorative Leather Work.

The present fancy for the use of artistic leather work in the decoration of houses bids fair to become a craze which will probably culminate within the next few years; after which the immediate demand for any and all kinds of fancy leathers will have departed, leaving behind, as a survival of the fittest, that alone which exhibits in its handling the principles of true art. It is, of course, a universally acknowledged fact that the truly beautiful is always beautiful. "Age cannot wither, nor custom stale" its intrinsic worth.

In an old Moorish city of Andalusia, not far from Seville, which was a center of art for hundreds of years prior to the thirteenth century, the famous Cordovan leather work had its origin. When Abderrahman I built his mosque, which survives as one of the most beautiful relies of ancient art in the world, in Cordova, and when silversmiths flocked thither from Damascus, the city became more famous for its peculiar leather work than for anything else. The Damascene artists hammered into the prepared leather all sorts of precious metals, including silver and gold; they illuminated the surface with brilliant colors, in Byzantian designs, and overlaid them with a lacquer which has withstood the wear and tear of ages, and there are yet in existence specimens of this leather which present an effect of jeweled work, beautiful beyond description.

In order to realize the brilliant, even gorgeous, style specimens of this leather which present an effect of jeweled work, beautiful beyond description.

In order to realize the brilliant, even gorgeous, style of decoration which prevailed at that period, I will quote a brief description by a celebrated historian of Abderrahman's mosque. It was built and decorated at the time that Cordova was arousing the admiration of the art world by its wonderful effect of jeweled work on leather.

of the art world by its wonderful effect of jeweled work on leather.

He says of it: "Passing through a grand court yard about five hundred feet in length, shady with palm and cypress and orange trees, and fresh with the full flow of fountains, the visitor enters a magnificent and be-wildering labyrinth of pillars. Porphyry and jasper, and marbles of many a tint, are boldly combined in a matchless mosalc. Of different heights, they have been adjusted to their present standard of twelve feet by being either sunk into the soil or lengthened by the addition of Corinthian capitals. Some of these pillars being either sank into the son or lengthened by the addition of Corinthian capitals. Some of these pillars were a present to Abderrahman from Leo of Byzantium. Twelve hundred was the number of the columns in the original building, and less than seven hundred remain. They divide the area of the building, which in the original building, and less than seven hundred remain. They divide the area of the building, which measures 395 feet from east to west by 356 from north to south, longitudinally into nineteen, and transversely into twenty-nine alsles—each row supporting a tier of open Moorish arches, which in turn gives the basis for a second tier, with its pillars resting on the keystones of the tier beneath. The full height of the ceiling is thus about thirty-five feet.

"Magnificent indeed as the building still is, it is almost impossible to realize what the mosque must have been when the worshipers thronged through its nine-teen gateways of bronze, and its 4700 lamps, fed with perfumed oil, shed at once light and fragrance through its brilliant aisles. Of the exquisite elaboration bestowed on the more sacred portions, abundant proof is afforded by the small heptagonal chapel of the Mihrabroofed with a single shell-like block of snow-white marble, and inlaid with Byzantine mosaics of glass and gold."

When we consider the minute and exquisite detail in concommended of the minute and exquisite detail in work which goes to make such an elaborate and gorgeous whole, we of these latter days, who are given to more sweeping effects, are overwhelmed with the ungrudging, pains, the tremendous capacity for detail, which these ancients exhibited. Their energy was superb, their accomplishments magnificent.

We may hope that the wave of true art, as exhibited in architecture (which is the outside) and house decoration (which means the inside of our homes) that has recently begun to lift itself in America, will carry us to great heights of permanent beauty; and it behooves us to study the methods, as well as the results, of all great artists of all time.

great heights of permanent beauty; and it behooves us to study the methods, as well as the results, of all great artists of all time.

I have lately seen specimens of leather work which reproduces exactly the effect of the old Cordovan. Although all record of the method was lost when the Moors were conquered by Ferdinand of Castile, in 1236, this seems indeed to be a renaissance of the art, and will add much by its use, decoratively, to the lasting beauty of our houses.

Tiffany had in New York last winter a few rare pieces of a Russian enamel upon gold which, in peculiar brilliancy of coloring and general design of the arabesques, resembled the enamel of Cordovan leather. One small loving-cup of this Russian work was valued at $500, and created a sensation among the art-lovers who had the privilege of examining it. The luminous quality of its colors was commented upon, as well as its exquisite workmanship, and it is these characteristics which the two arts have in common that serve chiefly to recommend them.

There are a few favored Americans who have been able to bring home from abroad, screens, chairs, etc., of old Spanish leather, which they have ranked as the choicest of their treasures, for although the real Cordovan treatment disappeared with the Moors, the Spanish heather, which they have ranked as the choicest of their treasures, for although the real Cordovan treatment disappeared with the Moors, the Spanish heather, which they have ranked as the choicest of their treasures, for although the real Cordovan treatment disappeared with the Moors, the Spanish heather, which they have ranked as the choicest of their treasures, for although the real Cordovan treatment disappeared with the Moors, the Spanish heather, which they have ranked as the choicest of their treasures, for although the real Cordovan treatment disappeared with the Moors, the Spanish heather, which they for leather craft, and have produced much artistic, durable work in this material.

The German method of relief work is also very beautiful, and is being utilized for cushions, screens and portieres. This leather work is peculiarly appropriate for the decoration of a man's "den," and some extremely rich and effective ones are being fitted up in it.

Burning a pattern into the undressed leather, or suede, is a popular method, for very rich designs can be carried out with great beauty in this way.

When we realize all of these variedly beautiful methods of treating such desirable stuff, we know that leather has come to take an active and permanent place in house decoration.

TRADE VALUE OF PHILIPPINES.

THE ENORMOUS POSSIBILITIES THEY PRESENT OF ASIATIC COMMERCE.

[Leslie's Weekly:] Our Pacific Coast is now within asy touch of China, one of the greatest of the consum ng nations. No other commercial nation is nearer i easy touch of China, one of the greatest of the consuming nations. No other commercial nation is nearer it than we, and the possession or the Philippines makes us the next-door neighbor of all the undeveloped portion of Asia, and opens enormous possibilities of trade in that direction. Russia, England, Germany, and France, awake to the possibilities of the future, are constantly intriguing to secure points of vantage in the East. American interests are threatened by these intrigues, for we are not expected to share in the commercial advantages that these nations seek, and they will exclude us from them if possible. They cannot exclude us if we retain the Philippines, for we will then stand at the gateway of Asiatic commerce, and it will be ours to command the situation. Already, as the Hon. John Barrett, ex-Minister to Siam, points out, our shipments of wheat from a single port on the Pacific—Portland, Or.—to Hongkong have been swelled 1600 per cent. within the past decade, and, annually, the cities on our Pacific Coast are sending millions of dollars' worth of American produce and manufactured products to China and Japan. Mr. Barrett says there is no reason why ten years hence China should not take, every year $20,000,000 worth of American cottons. Its imports are constantly increasing, and our geographical position entitles us to the highest percentage of China's trade.

PIERPONT MORGAN AND GOV. BUSHNELL.

The friendship between J. P. Morgan and Gov. Bushnell of Ohlo began when the latter was taken ill in New York during the dedication of Grant's tomb. A member of his staff hastened to the nearest house, and said hurriedly to the footman, "Will you please tell me who lives in this house?" "Mr. Morgan," was the reply. "Which Mr. Morgan?" "J. Pierpont Morgan." "Is he at home?" "He is, sir." "Please say that I am Col. Prettyman of Gov. Bushnell's staff. The Governor is seriously ill, and must have a short rest. Ask Mr. Morgan if I may bring him in here." The great fluancier came to the door, welcomed Col. Prettyman, assisted Gov. Bushnell into the house and entertained him as his guest.

IN PORTO RICO'S MOUNTAINS.

ONE HUNDRED MILES AMONG OUR WEST INDIAN HILLS WITH GOVERNMENT MULES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

AN JUAN (Porto Rico,) Aug. 6, 1899.—Let us take a trip together over Uncle Sam's new island. I can give you no idea of its beauty unless you go with We will start at Ponce and travel leisurely across Porto Rico, making notes upon the way. We shall go over a trip I recently made, and reproduce it in the notes I took upon the ground. Our conveyance is a battery wagon, such as is used by Uncle Sam's telegraphic operators in time of war. It is as big as a hall bedroom, and so fitted out with long cushioned seats that we can sit up or lie down at will. Our motive power is four of Uncle Sem's government mules. They will go as slow or as fast as we like, and we shall get relays of new males at noon every day.

The route we shall take shall be over the famous military road, made at an enormous cost by the Spaniards. It winds its way across the mountains from the coast of the Carifbean Sea to that of the Atlantic through one of the most beautiful regions of the world. It is so smooth and free from dust that you will not need to wear old clothes, and you can ride as comfortably upon it as upon your asphalt or macadam at home.

I despair of giving you a conception of this highway. There is nothing better in the United States. It is smoother than the driveways of Central Park, New York, and better constructed than the roads in Soldiers' Home Park at Washington. There is not a pebble, not ing first to Ponce City, two miles away. We go past the ox carts and pack trains which are bringing goods to the coast, stop a moment at the commissary department for supplies, and then make our way out through the sugar plantations to the foot of the mountains.

Vast cane fields are to be everywhere seen on both sides. The black earth is covered with a rich growth of pale green, out of which rise large buildings, the sugar factories, their smokestacks leaning, as it were, against the sky. The most of the coast is lined with sugar plantations, the most of which are of vast extent, and not a few of which are making fortunes for their owners.

We go over mountain streams, in which ecores of washerwomen, bare-footed and bare-legged, are sitting in the water and pounding the dirt out of the clothes. Others have spread the washed garments out on the grass, and are sprinkling them from the streams in order to bleach them.

In the Hills.

Now we are on the edge of the hills. How dry they look in the distance. Many of them seem rough and bare. They make us think of the Alleghanies in August—for at this point we miss the rich tropical luxuriance we expected to find in Porto Rico. It will be different farther on.

Notice how the clouds rest on the tops of the mountains. Many of the peaks are hidden, and fleecy white masses nestle here and there on the higher slopes. This is so throughout Porto Rico. There is plenty of sun, but the hot rays are often tempered by clouds. The air is moist, but there is always a breeze, and even at midday in the mountains the heat is not very unpleasant.

Many of the bills are covered with grass. There is

Many of the hills are covered with grass. There is one upon which fat cattle are feeding, and here is an-other which looks for all the world like any field of hut. It is always tied. Nothing is allowed to run at large in Porte Rico, and hogs are tethered by driving stakes in the ground and fastening them to these by ropes about their necks. In some places chickens are tied, and in others you see horses and cattle out in fields all fastened to stakes.

A Porto Rican Village.

A Porto Rican Village.

Now the government mules have been stopped in order that we may take a look at one of the small towns of our new island. We are in the village of Juan-a-Diaz, or of "John of God." It consists of a plaza or public square with a big stuccoed church facing it, and of about twenty houses or so built of stucco and wood, together with a lot of shacks made of palm leaves and boards, the homes of the poor.

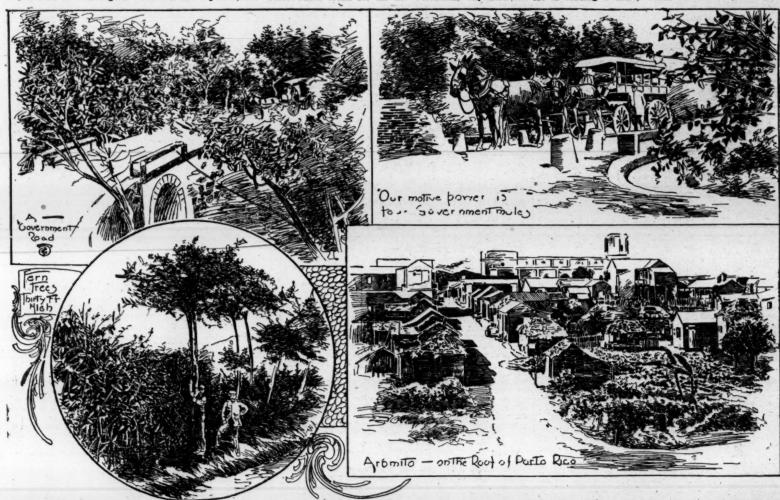

The little town with all outdoors to build in is made in solid blocks. Each house has a door and a few have holes for windows, but no glass.

We can look into some of the rude homes as we go by, for the doors are open. There is but little furniture, some have hammocks, and in one or two we see beds. Many contain cots made in the fashion of saw-bucks, with canvas stretched over them, so that they can be folded up and set aside in the daytime.

The people come to the doors and look at us. They all dress in cottons, the poorer women wearing little more than cotton skirts and jackets. Not a few of them are bareheaded and all are barefooted. Somehave naked babies in their arms, and naked children run about the streets. They are bright-eyed little things, of all colors, from jet black to Jersey cream. Many of them look lean except at the walst, where their stomachs protrude to an enormous extent. This comes from their diet of vegetables and fruits, especially bananas.

As we wait a man goes by with a load of oranges.

As we wait a man goes by with a load of oranges. He is leading a mule, which has two baskets slung a rut in it, and still it has been cut right out of the mountains. It is twenty feet wide, and more winding than the Mississippi River. At times as we go over it we shall be hanging to the sides of precipices, and we shall wind about innumerable horseshoe curves. Now the road may be seen both above and below us, and again we may trace its wanderings for miles about the hills.

As we go we shall see hundreds of peons working on the road. They are thought to have a fat job, for they have employment all the year round. They toil from sunrise to sunset, and their wages are 30 cents a day. At intervals along the road we pass square buildings, the homes of the officials in charge. Each gang has its overseer, whose chief sign of office is a leather bag, much like a woman's shopping bag, in which he carries the money to pay off the men.

The length of the military road is eighty-one miles.

I refer to the main trunk line. There are branches, over which we shall go, which make thirty or forty miles more, giving us a trip of more than one hundred

As to barns, there is, I venture, not one in the counyear round. It is never cold here, and there is always good pasture.

All along the road and scattered over the hills we see the homes of the peons. They are little shacks made of boards or palm bark. They are so poor that you would not think them fit for your cow. You could put up any one of them for less than $5, and few are miles more, giving us a trip of more than one hundred miles.

Maj. Hill, the civil engineer in charge of the public works of Porto Rico, says that the Spaniards had altogether eleven military roads, and that their original plans included the whole island. He estimates that the cost of this road over which we are going was probably $2,000,000. It was, however, constructed after the extravagant methods of the Spaniards, and if made today it should not cost more than $10,000 a mile.

We see more of them for less than $5, and few are more than fifteen feet square. We see more of these shacks as we go on our way up the hills. Some of them are to be reached only by mule paths, and are in such steep places that it would seem that even a mule could not climb up to them. Still those little huts are the homes of the peons, who are glad to be allowed to live in them, going back and forth to their work. There are no gardens about them, for they must buy all they eat. Some have a few chickens, and now and then you see the United States. It is fenced with barbed wire. Farther on are fields bounded by prickly hedges of wild pincapples. The pines are so sharp that you cannot crawl over them, and they serve well to keep in the stock.

Where are the farmhouses and where are the barns? Farmhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses as we know them are not to be seen in Formhouses, a building made of boards with holes in the walls for windows and with a pair of stairs reaching from the ground to its first floor. The houses are built high off the ground, and, as in the cities, the well-to-do people all live upstairs.

As to barns, there is, I venture, not one in the coun-

On the Roof of Porto Rico.

Leaving Juan-a-Diaz we go on our winding way up the mountains. We climb higher and higher, hanging to the sides of the hills, until at last we reach Albonito, the pass over the range which divides the island. We are now a half mile above where we started, and are on the roof of Porto Rico.

We are in one of the most beautiful parts of Uncle Sam's new Switzerland, in one of the most ploturesque

Sam's new Switzerland, in one of the most picturesque regions of the world. As far as we can see on all sides rise green hills, spotted here and there by the dark shadows of the clouds. Billowy mountains roll one over the other on all sides until they lose themselves in the sky. Below us we can see the military road. Just above are the Spanish earthworks which commanded the road when we invaded the island, and we can climb up and stand on the very spots where their cannon thundered a warning to the troops.

Farther on our journey we go down a branch of the military road to visit Guvamo Heights, where our troops were attacked when they made their way up from the coast. Here you can see the military road for miles winding its way like a white snake up the hills. It was perfectly commanded by the fortifications. Indeed, some of the best of our officers think that had the Spaniards tried to hold Porto Rico the country is such that we could not have conquered them.

The Beauties of the Tropics.

The Beauties of the Tropics.

I have spoken of Porto Rico as Switzerland. It is like Switzerland without the ice and snow, and still it has beauties which Switzerland has not. The trees are those of the semi-tropics. Long lines of green hang down from their branches. Orchids as big as a peck meosure wrap themselves around their limbs, and not a few of them have a veil of Spanish moss. Others are great masses of bright red, yellow or purple flowers. I saw one tree twenty feet high covered with great balls of white wool. It was a cotton tree, and the cotton bursting from the balls was just like the cotton produced in our Southern States.

On the Atlantic side of the island I reached a region of ferns, in which there were fern trees from twenty to thirty feet high. I had myself photographed standing beside these trees, and at the same time gathered some maiden-hair ferns which had branches as fine as the most delicate lace.

Let us notice the vegetation as we travel down the north slope of the mountains. See those fields of banness which cover the sides of the hills. The polarity of the most which cover the sides of the hills. The plants of a rich maroon, and those which have opened are of a blood red.

What a lot of palm trees there are, and how many varieties! We saw cocoanuts down on the coast. Up here in the mountains the most conspicuous trees are the royal realms. They spot the landscape standing out like tall spires against the hills. Now and then we see a bread-fruit tree, whose fan-like leaves flop about in the breeze. Now we pass a coffee plantation, and after leaving the town of Cayey we ride for miles through mountains covered with tobacco. This section is one of the best tobacco-raising regions of Porto Rico. The hills are covered with dark green plants and long tobacco sheds, in which the leaves are dried and cured, run up and down the mountain sides.

The Soil is Rich.

The Soil is Rich.

As we ride over the island we get a good idea of its soil. It is wonderfully fertile, but so rugged and ragged that you would not think it could be cultivated. If it were arid it would be as rough as the Rocky Mountains. It is the only climate and the moisture which keep it green and fertile. The air is full of water, and the conditions are such that all kinds of seeds will grow if you can get a covering for them. If you build a brick wall here and do not paint it within three years a moss will have formed upon it in which you can grow lettuce.

In our journey we notice the different classes of land in Porto Rico. I have already referred to the sugar plantations of the coast. Farther up you come to the plantations of coffee, tobacco and bananas, and at the very top the pastures. There are also pastures lower down, and in places the tobacco and the coffee grow clear to the mountain summits.

down, and in places the tobacco and the coffee grow clear to the mountain summits. It is wonderful indeed how rough some of the cultivated land is. The mountains run down into valleys of a wedge shape. Much land is cultivated which would be left untouched in the United States. This is so on the hills, which are so steep that you would hardly think the crops would hang to them, so steep that in the United States the rain would wash all away. Here, however, the moisture gives the soil a thick vegetation of earth binders, and it does not wash as with us. I believe that the whole island is susceptible of cultivation, and that it will at some time be a great garden patch largely devoted to fruits and vegetables for our city markets. city markets.

Interior Cities.

Coming back now to our trip over the mountains, let us look at the towns at which we stop over night. We are going slowly, and are taking four days for the journey. We spend two nights at Cayey. It is a fair sample of an interior Porto Rican city. It has about four thousand inhabitants, and covers about as much ground as one of our towns of 500.

It has a church and a plaza, and a barracks for soldiers. Its houses are nearly all one-story cottages, built close to the street, in blocks of two or three. They are all small, and some of the best could be made for $250 apiece in the United States. Many of them would not cost $100. Nearly all are of wood, and not a few have iron roofs. None are plastered, and none have windows or chimneys. The cooking is done upon charcoal; there is no need of fires for heat. Few of the houses have gardens about or behind them, and none have gardens in front.

A Porto Rican Hotel.

The hotel of Cayey is in the center of the town. It is a one-story building, containing a parlor and sitting-room at the front and a dining-room at the back, with bedrooms opening out into them. The kitchens are in bedrooms opening out into them. The kitchens are in the rear.

We sleep at night on iron bedsteads. Our spring mattress is made by stretching a sheet of canvas over the framework. Our pillows are small and tough, and our covering is usually an army blanket.

The greatest discemfort comes from the fleas. These attack you as soon as you lie down and feed upon you until you rise. We find this so in the hotel at Caguas farther on, and, in fact, in all the country hotels.

Outside this, the living is not bad. We have coffee, oranges and eggs for breakfast, and soups, roasts, stews and desserts for luncheons and dinners. Our dessert is usually a combination of orange peel or cocoanut sweetened with sugar into a form of preserves, and we end each meal with a ripe banana, a cup of coffee and a bit of Porto Rican cheese. The food is quite as good as you get in a $2-a-day house in the United States, and the prices charged are much less.

THE ELDER'S INSPIRATION.

At the close of the forencon session of a ministerial conference, in announcing the opening subject for the afternoon, the presiding officer said:

"Elder H. will present a paper on 'The Devil.' " Then he added earnestly: "Please be prompt in attendance, for Brother H. has a carefully prepared paper and is full of his subject."

And the Homiletic Review says that it was some minutes before the presiding officer understood the laughter which followed his remarks.

THE WOMAN

OF THE TIMES.

By Herself.

HE proponents of coeducation are contemplating a master stroke. They propose to go straight to the heart of the enemy's country, wrest therefrom his dearest weapon and with it smite him hip and thigh. On the fighting frontier it has never been considered thoroughly good form to horrow a man's revolver and then shoot him with it. But in the tactics of argument the strategy must be allowed to be entirely admissible, especially when it is so brilliantly successful as it bids fair to be in this case. It has always been a favorite argument with those who defend the monastic system of education that the constant meeting of the two sexes in coeducational colleges leads to flirtations and love affairs, which interfere with the serious business of college life and make it impos-sible for either the girls or the men to take that interest in their studies which they ought to take and to reap that advantage from their college life to which they are entitled.

And now comes one who says, suppose they do flirt and fall in love and marry—'tis the best thing in the and fall in love and marry—tis the best thing in the world they can do, and that it is vastly better for these young men and women to form happy marriages, even at some expense to their scholarship, than to remain celibates and know an awful lot. In a certain very serious and high-class weekly a member of the faculty of the University of Wyoming sets forth some statistics concerning the marriages of women college graduates. concerning the marriages of women college graduates and deduces from his figures some interesting arguments. He contrasts the matrimonial records of two colleges, Bryn Mawr, which is solely for women, and the University of Kansas, which is coeducational. Up to 1894, only 14 per cent. of the graduates of the former had married, while exactly half of the women graduates of the latter had been led to the altar. He might have added also that not one of these latter has ever been divorced. The rarity of divorces among women college graduates, however, is a fact of much sociological interest that has not yet received its due attention. Moreover, the writer goes on to show that nearly half of these married Kansas graduates were espoused by their fellow-students, and he further notes, as a fact

Moreover, the writer goes on to show that nearly nation of these married Kansas graduates were espoused by their fellow-students, and he further notes, as a fact of interest, that these marriages are especially frequent among members of the same class whose names are in alphabetical order, since such were seated next each other in the class rooms. Apparently, the only deduction to be made from this professor's figures is that there is no matrimonial agency which can equal in efficiency the coeducational college.

But maybe geographical location, with its attending social peculiarities, may also have something to do with the results which he has noted. There is the Boston University, for instance. That is coeducational, and has been for many years. It has a much larger list of women graduates than does the University of Kansas, but The Woman will agree to wear her last year's hat all next winter if it can show even as high a percentage of marriages as does Bryn Mawr, and she does not believe that a baker's dozen of its men and women graduates have ever intermarried. Cornell, also, which has a long record of coeducational facilities, belongs in the same class, as far as its matrimonial record is concerned, with the Boston institution. In all that region over which Boston still exerts an intellectual influence there is an abnormal feeling between the sexes which is not confined to the young men and women of the marrying age. There is between them a reciprocal feeling of distrust, ill-nature, contempt, almost of anger, the cause of which presents a pretty field for discussion. And it is aggravated rather than allayed—which is one of the peculiarities of that peculiar section—by the associations of college life. But the broad valleys and breezy plains of the wide and blessed West have left no such poison as that in the veins of its young men and women. They love each other from their cradles to their graves, as the Good Lord meant they should, and they bear with each other's faults and laugh at each other's foibles

But putting aside his figures and considering only his arguments on general principles, the Wyoming professor makes out a very pretty case for the coeducational college as a desirable matrimopial factor. He argues interestingly that marriage based on the intimate associations and mutual revelations of fellow-studentship has in it more likelihood of happiness than it can possibly have when it grows out of acquaintance in society.

This change of base in the arguments for and against This change of base in the arguments for and against coeducation is a very suggestive development of the time. The thing that is now most worrying the wise men is not whether or not women are capable of taking the higher education, nor whether or not the mental labor it entails will harm them physically. Those were the war cries against it two decades ago. Nowadays the wise men are disturbed over the disinclination to marriage which they think is shown by educated women and over the comparatively low birth rate among them when they do marry. Prof. Slosson's too brief article is the first indication of the answer which the advocates is the first indication of the answer which the advocates of coeducation are preparing to make. He says that, with regard to the birth rate, if women graduates bear fewer children, among their children there are fewer deeths, so that the final result is not affected. And he thinks that as coeducation makes its way the marriage rate among them will rise to its proper level.

There is one phase of the question not without interest to which none of the wise men has paid any attention. And that is, how does the marriage rate among the graduates of the men's colleges compare with that of men graduates of coeducational institutions? And also, how does the average marrying age of men graduates compare with the average marrying age of those men who have not passed through college?

In his speech at Winnemucea, Mr. Bryan declared that his party is stronger now than it was during the last campaign on the questions over which that bottle was fought and that the Chicago platform will be affirmed entire at the Democratic convention next year. Once upon a time a reporter on a New York paper went to the Mayor of that city—and, by the way, the Mayor was a Democrat—to ask for information concerning certain affairs connected with his office. And the Mayor of the biggest, richest, most important city in the United States, the heart of the country's social, commercial, artistic and intellectual life, replied to him: "All them facts have been verified to be absolutely false." And that describes the condition of the Chicago platform at this moment. Chicago platform at this moment.

What a perfect, inimitable, Bostonian touch was that unconscious one of William Lloyd Garrison in his speech at the annual meeting of peace societies in a New England town the other day when he spoke of "the nobler sentiments which make Massachusetts exceptional!" If he, or, any other New Englander, had tried not one of them could have said a thing so perfectly typical of the Boston spirit. Some of these days that spirit is going to become a National Problem and all the rest of the country will have to consider ways and means by which the virulence of its pharifalical temper can be diluted and its self-conceit made leastidiculous. And, indeed, it is not any too soon to begin on that question right now. How would it do to transport all the New England women—make a complete clean-up of them—to the West, where they will have a chance to marry and get something else to think of than how to make all the rest of the world as good as they are, and then send back a sufficient number of western women to make wives for all the New England What a perfect, inimitable, Bostonian touch was that or than now to make all the rest of the world as good as they are, and then send back a sufficient number of western women to make wives for all the New England men? The Woman submits that would be the best thing that could happen to masculine New England, and that if anything could induce it to consider the rest of the country good enough to inhabit the same planet with itself that exchange of femininity would be the very thing.

SOAP FOR CAR FARE.

[St. Louis Star:] An amusing incident happened on Carondelet street car Saturday afternoon. The car was going south. At Lami street a big, portly woman got aboard. On her arm she carried a large market basket that apparently was filled with "bargain" purchases from some department store. "Three minutes after she had sat down and deposited the basket between her feet on the floor, the conductor came along with the usual cry: "Fare, please."

The old lady conned her appressing the conductor came along with the usual cry: "Fare, please."

'That won't do; must have your fare now," said the fare collector.

"Well, I haven't the money."
"Well, give me something the value of a nickel and you can redeem it at the end of the line."
The old lady hesitated a moment, then put her hand down info the basket and drew out a bar of laundry soap and handed it to h.m.
Everybody in the car haughed, but the conductor took the soap and rang up Fr fare.

NEW BOOKS

RECENT PUBLICATIONS - NOTES AND OTHER AND REVIEWS.

"Music and Musicians."

NDER the sweeping title of "Music and Musicians" M. Lavignac, professor of harmony in the Paris Conservatory, has issued a veritable encyclopedia of musical matters. Those who have read this author's brilliant and comprehensive treatise upon the life and works of Wagner-and no one who wishes to keep abreast of either the musical thought of the time or of the general movements of human philosophy can afford to miss that highly illuminating work—will not need to be told that this present volume is a model of logical arrangement and lucid and satisfying treatment of its subject matter. M. Lavignac has a number of mental qualities which appear to great advantage in his literary work, but that one which shines preëminent above the others is his ability to grasp all the ramifications of a many-sided subject, separate them into their logical divisions, and, while treating each part clearly and fully, so keep in view their natural relations that the reader sees them as one organic whole. This present volume, which is translated by William Marchant and edited, with additions on music in America, by H. E. Krehbiel, has given him especial scope for the exercise of this faculty, and he has used it to the very best ad-volume, which is translated by William Marchant and edited, with additions on music in America, by H. E. Krehbiel, has given him especial scope for the exercise of this faculty, and he has used it to the very best advantage.

While "Music and Musicians" does not, and from its very nature could not, show such interesting intelectual qualities and such brilliant philosophical treatment as does the author's work on Wagner, it does present to the student, the amateur, and to that large class who like to add to their general knowledge, a volume of information, brought, into compact compass, of the things which they need to know. The author, in a brief preface, defines the aim of the book to be to present. The the most condensed form possible, well-defined notions concerning the things which must form the substratum of very musician's serious studies, and of interesting all those who love the musical art in whatever degree by unveiling to them its machinery and its methods." He adds that he musical art in whatever degree by unveiling to them its machinery and its methods, also, will learn from it the elements of our special technology.

M. Lavignac has separated his subject matter into five general divisions. The first treats of musical sounds, of the production, transmission, and perception of sound, with a description and illustrations of the organs of hearing, of acousties and the relations between acoustics and rhythm. The second division is a study of the materials of sound and, under the two subdivisions of "Instrumentation" and "Orchesfration, gives a complete description of every important instrument for the production of music from the human volce to the tomtom. This chapter is not merely a descriptive reference list, but is constantly enriched and made interesting by romarks upon the uses and capacities of each instrument and of its varying values in different situations. The chapter closes with an interesting comparison of timbres and colors and a brief consideration of the hardolf and presents a concise m

On the subject of the increase of sonority, he says that it is the inevitable result of the progress of orchestra-tion and that it will probably be still further increased. From the point of view of the symphony, which he con-siders the highest form of musical composition, he thinks this is no disadvantage, and adds that even in the musical drama where "it might be feared that the voices of the singers could not rise above the tumult, if it should please the composer to unleash at the wrong time his instrumental pack," such a result will never happen to a man of talent and of experience in the art of orchestration.

Sir Edwin Arnold Again.

A trim little volume in prose and verse, a translation of the Persian classic, "The Gulistan" of Shaikh Sa'di, is the most recent result of Sir Edwin Arnold's literary activity. Among Persian scholars and among European lovers of eastern literature, of whom there has been none more enthusiastic than Sir Edwin, Shaikh Sa'di's none more enthusiastic than Sir Edwin, Shaikh Sa'di's "Rose Garden" has for centuries been considered a masterpiece of literature. It is a collection of proverbike tales, some very brief and none more than a few pages in length, interspersed with verses which condense much worldly wisdom into small compass and give it always happy expression and polished form. Shaikh Sa'di—"the Nightingale of Shiraz," his admirers have been calling him for six centuries—must have been one of the rarest runabouts that ever lived, and if Sir Edwin Arnold would put into his facile English the story of the kindly Persian sage's long and adventurous life undoubtedly it would strike a more responsive chord, in this age and in the Anglo-Saxon race, than his graceful tales and shrewd philosophy can possibly find. He was born at Shiraz in A. D. 1184, and in his early manhood set out to see everything in the world that was worth seeing. All over Southern Asia he wandered, and down into Africa, and even penetrated into Europe At one date or another he made fourteen pligrimages to Mecca. For some time he dwelt, a renowned and inspired teacher, in Damascus, and then lived as a hermit in the desert near Jerusalem. And finally, after thirty years of wandering, he returned to his native Shiraz and sat him down in a little garden where he lived and wrote, out of the fullness of wisdom he had learned in his wanderings, until he died at the age, so it is said, of 108 years. In those days, men who traveled did not have to go seeking adventures. They had to run to get away from them. And a man who went wandering about for thirty years with an inquiring mind and a courageous heart must have encountered no end of such things. In his preface, Sir Edwin gives this one instance, out of a thousand that must have happened to Shaikh Sa'di: He was roaming about the western coast of Gujerat when he came to the Holy Shrine of Siva, where "every morning at sunrise the image of the god in the great temple, with its eyes made of diamonds and its robes of jeweled gold, lifted its hands in blessing to all the votaries who itocked from far and near to witness the mighty miracle. Sa'di, though a believer in divine things, was a oit of a sceptic about Dervishes and priestly humbug generally, and so, having hidden himself one day behind the image, he saw the attendant priest working its arms with a rope and thereby 'pulling-off' the portent. Unluckily, the priest also observed Sa'di, and having attempted to capture him, that gentle-hearted but intrepid traveler found no alternative except to throw the Brahmin into the deep well of the temple and to fly for safety, having first, however, smashed the deceitful effigy." Surely, if Sir Edwin would gather together such fragments of the tale of Sa'di's life as it is possible to find he could construct a narrative that would be delightful reading!

Sir Edwin entertains a very enthusiastic admiration for Shaikh Sa'di's "Garden of Roses"—a more enthusiastic admiration, it must be said, than most Anglo-Saxons can possibly feel. He says: "The Shaikh can possibly feel. He says: "The Shaikh was really the Horace and Marco Polo of the Far East combined into one rich and gracious nature." Nobbdy can object to the Marco Polo part of the comparison, but the lovers of Horace will certainly protest. Most English-speaking readers will think Martin Tupper would have been a more apt ingredient to mix with the Marco Polo of his combination. But it is not strange that Sir Edwin Arnold should be so strongly drawn to the old Persian sage, for their intellects are very much alike. The restless nature, the love of travel, the inquiring mind, the practical bent, the shrewdness, the literary facility, the degree of poetical talent and appreciation which goes just far enough to enable its possessor to be, very gracefully, not quite a poet, the literary polish and geniality—all these qualities in the ancient Shaikh find their counterpart in his modern admirer and make them very close akin.

"The Garden of Roses" is divided into four "gateways," or chapters, and in each of these there is gathered a multitude of anecdotes which point morals and verses which adorn the tales. The anecdotes of each chapter all are centered, more or less remotely, around one subject, that of the first chapter being "The Manners of Kings," of the second, "Concerning Darweeshes," of the third, "The Excellency of Moderation," and of the fourth, "The Benefits of Taciturnity." Sir Edwin has made a very literal translation. The greatest fault to be found with his work is that he has left in the text too many of the Persian words without explanation of their meaning.

"What Women Can Earn."

As typical a product of the age as it would be possible to find is a compilation of articles bearing the title, "What Women Can Earn." At no other time in the world's history than at the end of this ninetcenth century would anybody have thought of writing such a book. At no other time would it have been possible for the book to be written, and at no other time would anybody have cared about its contents. Its multitude of articles treat of the various occupations by which it is now possible for women to earn their livelihood, with advice concerning the natural aptitude and the preparation required for each, and information as to its duties and its compensations. Many of the articles appeared last year in the Woman's Page of the New York Tribune, which quite thoroughly investigated the subject of occupations for women.

The book goes into the matter very practically and in nearly every case the articles are written by women, or men, who know the subject thoroughly and have either worked their own way into a competence and reputation by its means or have employed women who have done so. The subject of "Competent Proofreaders" is treated by Theodore L. de Vinne, a member of the most famous printing establishment in the United States. Miss Irene H. Sutliffe, director of the training school of the New York Hospital, tells "How Nurses Are Trained." Dr. Margarita A. Skewart, a practicultioner for twelve years, describes "Defitistry as a Profession." Mrs. Janet E. Runtz-Rees, a practical farmer in Connecticut, writes of "Cash in Cows, Pigs and Hens." Mrs. Emily S. Beach, a riding instructor in New York and Newport, teils what can be done by women in that line. An article on "Outlook for Ceramists" is written by Mrs. L. Vance Phillips of Los Angeles, and Miss Adelaide Haase, well-known in this city and now connected with the Astor Library in New York, writes of "An Environment of Books." Mrs. Candace Wheeler, who has been famous for many years as an authority on decorative art, treats of "Art Desi

"Baldoon."

Le Roy Hooker has put a good many pleasant and entertaining things into the collection of connected sketches which he calls "Baldoon," although he has done so with a curious ignorance of how to use his material to good advantage. His book is very like a collection of those authentic documents concerning people and affairs which, while they are not history, are yet the sources out of which history is made. Mr. Hooker's book is not a novel, but it contains good. and altairs which, while they are not history, are yet the sources out of which history is made. Mr. Hooker's book is not a novel, but it contains some very fetching material out of which a novel might be constructed. The work is a collection of sketches about the people in a little settlement in Western Canada, strung together loosely by the appearance of the same characters in all-of them and working out toward the end, into a plot of considerable interest. The author announces in a preface that the characters are most of them real people who really said and did the diverting things which he attributes to them, and that he himself knew them in the same homely and shrewd guise in which he has presented them to his readers. It is a pity that Mr. Hooker did not know better how to make use of this material which lay at his hand, for nearly every one of his people shows a possibility of development into a striking character. But he has not tried to do more than to describe the one or two salient peculiarities in each one and to recount a few quaint sayings and doeach one and to recount a few quaint sayings and do-ings. But notwithstanding his lack of literary art he ings. But notwithstanding his lack of literary art he has managed, here and there, to create an illusion of atmosphere, mainly, apparently, by the mere force of his own loving sympathy with the people whom he has put into his book. If it had been worked out with more skill the plot which forms the thread of the last few chapters could have been made into a story of surpassing interest. The book, as a whole, is a curious instance of how an author can, in some degree, attain to that greatest essential in fiction—vital, human interest—without knowing in the least how to do it. He can, if his love be great and his sympathy strong, transfer to his pages something of the very beating of human hearts. Mr. Hooker has produced no little of this effect, although he has done it in a clumsy and inartistic way. [Baldoon. By Le Roy Hooker. Rand, McNally & Co.: Chicago and New York.]

"Nathan Hale."

The story of Nathan Hale, the martyr spy, is told by Charles W. Brown, with all the detail it is possible to procure, in a small paper volume, which one can read procure, in a small paper volume, which one can read in an hour. The author has gathered together all the authenticated incidents of Capt. Hale's life, the most important of the prose and poetical tributes to his memory, some comparisons between his life, death and character and those of Maj. Andre, and woven the whole into a brief biography of one of the most romantic and engaging figures in American history. As his excuse for writing the book he says: "The story of Nathan Hale cannot be too often told, for it is the best illustration we have of the character of the men to whom we owe a debt that neither this nor all future generations can hope to repay." He has made his little book of particular interest by bringing together many of the tributes of Hale's contemporaries and friends to his character, his unusual mental equipments, his moral steadfastness, his gentleness and his courage.

In a little book entitled "Our Navy in Time of War," in the Appletons' series of Home Reading Books, Frank-lin Matthews has adopted an excellent method for the In Matthews has adopted an excellent method for the treatment of that subject for young readers. He covers the period from 1861 to 1898 and, taking the most prominent events of the two wars, he throws them out vividly and picturesquely against a background that is filled in with condensed narrative of less striking happenings. He explains that he begins with the civil war because the types of vessels and guns now in general use throughout the world were largely begun and developed during that period. Some of the illustrations of which there are many, contrast the warships and equipments of today with those that were in use at the beginning of the civil war. Mr. Matthews wields a picturesque pen and he has a faculty of setting forth facts in a way that cannot but make them interesting to the dullest of young people.

Books of Tomorrow.

R. F. Fenno & Co. of New York announce for publication next month "The Woolng and Madness of Luther Strong," by the Californian, Thomas J. Vivlan, author of "With Dewey at Manila," "The Fall of Santiago," "Seven Smiles and a Few Fibs." It is a tale of New England and is full of tragic mystery.

Augustus Thomas's new American play, "Arizona," now being presented in Chicago at the Grand Operahouse, is in the hands of the printer, and will-soon be issued by R. H. Russell in book form, illustrated by twelve pictures from the play, and with a striking cover design by Frederic Remington. Mr. Russell also announces for early publication the Maude Adams edition of "Romeo and Juliet." The book will be beautifully illustrated by pictures of Miss Adams and her company, by Gilbert, Haskell and others, and attractively, bound.

Tolstoy's new novel, "Resurrection," which is said to be by far the best work he has done in several years, will be published some time this fall by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. They also announce a new novel by Benjamin Swift, "Siren City," a story of the disillusions of international marriages. Other fiction to be published by them will be W. Pett Ridge's "A Son of the State," a study of the lowest stratum of London life; "The Orange Girl," a tale of a London actress in the eighteenth century, by Sir Walter Besant; a story of today by S. R. Crockett, "Ione March, a Woman with a Fortune;" a volume of short stories by Max Pemberton, and Paul Leicester Ford's "Janice Meredith." A new volume of poems by Paul Laurence Dunbar, the negro poet, called "Poems of Cabin and Field," will be among their fall books.

A sketch of Admiral George Dewey, the man, by John Barrett, late United States Minister to Slam, and for ten months war correspondent at Manila, from May, 1898, to March, 1899, is announced for publication by Harper & Bros, about the 1st of October. It is to be not so much an extended biography as a modest attempt to give an adequate representation of the character and personality of the foremost American of the present day. Sufficient biographical information is, however, incorporated to make it a valuable book of reference and authority.

day. Sumeient biographical information is, nowever, incorporated to make it a valuable book of reference and authority.

Another book on Admiral Dewey will be in Messrs. Appleton's "Young Heroes of Our Navy Series." The book, which will be published in the fall, will be called "Dewey on the Mississippi; the Story of the Admiral's Younger Years," and will present vivid pictures of Dewey the schoolboy in Vermont, of Dewey the midshipman, and, finally, of his part in Farragut's passage of the Confederate forts in the lower Mississippi and his destruction of the Confederate fleet in 1862. Another book for boys, dealing with a hero of the sea, will be "The Story of Magellan," by Hezekiah Butterworth, who will appropriately supplement his narrative of the discovery of the Philippines with some modern information regarding our much-discussed colonies. Among the new fiction announced by this house may be mentioned Anthony Hope's. "The King's Mirror," a romance of royal life under conditions that, while modern, have yet been shared by representatives of royalty almost through history; and "A Voyage at Anchor," a tale of an old hulk on the Kentish coast, by W. Clark Russell.

LITERARY NOTES.

A paper edition of Thomas Hardy's "Tes" is soon to be published and an adaptation of the story is to be brought out in a London theater next spring.

The publication of two new volumes of Wagner's letters has been announced. They will bear the titles, "Wagner's Letters to Wesendouck" and "Wagner's Letters to Heckel."

Richard Henry Stoddard, who must be nearly, if not quite, the oldest American man of letters now living, is said to be writing his reminiscences. He has been in the midst of literary matters all his life and has known most of the men and women who have been in the public eye for many years, so that his book ought to be full of interest.

Rudyard Kipling's "From Sea to Sea" is in its thirty-fifth thousand, in this country, while of his last col-lection of short stories, "The Day's Work," over one hundred thousand copies have already been sold."

There has been a remarkable increase of interest in Poe and his works during the last six months, which makes very timely the announcement of a book by Joel Benton entitled "In the Poe Circle." Mr. Benton has been for some time engaged on a study of Poe and his contemporation. contemporaries.

The complete novel in the New Lippincott for September is by Maurice Hewlett and is entitled "The Duchess of Nona." Mrs. Schuyler Crowinshield, E. F. Benson, Ruth McEnery Stuart, and Maurice Thompson are among the contributors of short stories, and George Gibbs, under the title, "The Effrontery of Paul Jones," gives a description of the capture of Whitehaven.

The September number of McClure's Magazine contains a poem on the Dreyfus affair, by Edwin Markham, author of "The Man With the Hoe." To the same number Cleveland Moffett contributes an article on Menelik, the Ethiopian King who fights with Galling guns and smokeless powder, keeps informed of the newest mechanical inventions and scientific discoveries, and in his care of his half-naked, semi-barbarlous subjects sleeps only three or four hours a night. only three or four hours a night.

Mrs. Steel married an Indian civilian, and spent some twenty years of her life in the Punjab, where she acquired a number of Indian dialects. In the eastern cities, and especially in New York, there has been raging a bitter newspaper controversy over the merits of "David Harum." On one side are ranged the admirers of the book, who claim that it is a permanent contribution to American letters and that its author should have rank beside Irving, Bret Harte, Mark Twain and other great humorists of America. On the other side are those who think the book inane and commonplace, uninteresting in its matter and without artistic excellence. They believe that its present popularity is merely a fad of the moment, and that it will soon take its place among those obsolete books which enjoyed a great run for a little wille, such as "Helen's Babies" and "Tribby," but which are rarely heard of now.

The Atlantic Monthly for September opens with a review by President Charles Kendall Adams of "The Irresistible Tendencies," in which he considers the great movements which change the face of the world; Jane H. Findlater discusses "The Scot of Fiction," who, she thinks, misrepresents the real Scot; Jacob A. Riis explains in "The Genesis of the Gang" how the hoodlum of the big city is an inevitable consequence of existing conditions; J.-S. Tunison discusses the philosophy of "The Book Review;" John Burroughs, in "Criticism and the Man," talks of the nature and province of criticism; Samuel M. Crothers has an essay on "The Mission of Humor;" and Prof. Hugo Munsterpurg draws parallels of characteristics between "The Germans and the Americans," and submits that much might be accomplished for the benefit of the world were the two nations more willing to learn from each other.

To the same number Prof. Henry Van Dyke will contribute an illustrated poem, "A Slumber Song of the Fisherman's Child." By W. C. Brownell, the author of "French Traits," there will be an appreciation of the work of George Butler, with many reproductions of his paintings. Frederic Irland will describe a 500-mile cance trip from Mattwa to the head waters of the Ottawa River. This is to be the first of a series of sporting articles on almost untouched regions in the wilderness. Aftert White Vorse, who was a member of the Peary expedition, will be represented by a tale of life in the Arctic circle. The installment of Stevenson's letters will deal with his life at Saranac Lake during the winter of 1888. Robert Grant's series of "Searchlight Letters" will close with some frank political and sociological views addressed "To a Political Optimist."

A recent number of the Popular Science Monthly contained an article on "Herbert Spencer at Seventy-nine," which gives the following account of his life at Brighton, which gives the following account of his life at Brighton, where he took up his residence a year and a half ago, in order to escape the London fogs: "At present Mr. Spencer is able to give very little time to work, and being confined to the house most of the time, the routine of his daily life admits of little variety. His first business in the day is to hear the morning paper read; then he attends to his correspondence, and if well enough does a little work. If any matter is going through the press he will generally be seen with a proof close by. His afternoon is spent in such relaxation as is afforded by ecanning the illustrated papers and magazines, listening to music, which must always be classical, or; if sufficiently well, a drive; and he retires at 10 o'clock." Mr. Spencer's health has been unusually feeble for a number of years. The portrait on the opposite page is from a photograph made a little more than a year ago, when he had reached the age of 78 years.

The London Athanaeum, writing of Mrs. Wharton's book, "The Greater Inclination," reviewed in these columns last week, is very much surprised that an American can write grammatically. It says: "Though presumably an American herself and writing of American men and women, she yet has a command of good English." The only conclusion to be drawn from its remarks is that the critic of the Athanaeum has heretofore confined his readings of American books to the works of Artemus Ward, Josh Billings, and Petroleum V. Nasby.

works of Artemus Ward, Josh Billings, and Petroleum V. Nasby.

The reduction in price to 25 cents, which is inaugurated in the September number of Harper's Magazine, calls out these remarks from the New York Evening Post on the subject of the cheap magazines: "It is safe to say that we have today in this country a million more buyers and readers of magazines than we had a decade ago. A vast new clientele has been called into being. How swiftly it come into view when the appeals first began to be made to it is seen in the successive reductions of price made by McClure's and the Cosmopolitan. The conductors of those magazines were doubt less surprised at the audience they secured. Through their efforts, with those of other publishers working along the same lines, the magazine puble became enormously enlarged in a very short time. Thousands of people took up the habit of buying their magazine, when the price became 10 cents, just as they had before bought a daily paper. The old and somewhat select class of leisurely magazine-readers was suddenly transformed into a multitude which no man can number. What had before happened in book publishing came to be true in magazine publishing—that is, a vast popular audience was reached. The proprietors tapped the vein of the great democratic reading class which De Tocqueville forecast. The masses are not given to nice distinction in their reading. A book is a book, a nowel ville forecast. The masses are not given to nice distinction in their reading. A book is a book, a novel a novel, a magazine a magazine; the only ground of discrimination being, the cheaper the better. But it is the demonstration that there are a possible 1,000,000 readers at 10 cents, instead of 50,000 or 100,000 readers at 25 and 35 cents, which has been fluttering the magazine. at 25 and 35 cents, which has been fluttering the mag-azines and producing the intense competition between them."

The Dance in St. Petersburg.

ALLS, hotels and watering places are woefully alike all the world over. Their essentials are the same in Japan as in Peru, in Moscow as in Rome, and to have experience of one is to be acquainted with the type, for they differ only in degree. True, this degree is sometimes equal to a complete difference of character, and may even form the line of demarcation between tedium and amusement. Thus at a Russian ball people thoroughly enjoy themselves in the present tense. Their pleasure does not consist of past pain, as it occasionally does elsewhere. In the salons of St. Petersburg, for instance, the guests actually dance; they do not morely shamble to and fro in a crowd, crumpling their clothes and ruffling their tempers, and call it a set of quadrilles. They have ample space for the sweeping movements and complicated figures of all the orthodox ball dances, and are generally gifted with sufficient plastic grace to carry them out in style. They carefully cultivate dances calling for a kind of grace which is almost beyond the reach of art. The mazurka is one of the finest of these, and it is quite a favorite at balls on the banks of the Neva. It needs a good deal of room, one or more spurred officers and grace, grace, and grace. The dash with which the partners rush forward, the clinking and clattering of spurs as heel clashes with heel in midair, punctuating the staccato of the music, the loud thud of boots striking the ground, followed by their sibilant slide along the polished floor, then the swift springs and sudden bounds, the whirling syrations and dizzy evolutions, the graceful genufications and quick embraces, and all the other intricate and maddening movements to the accompaniment of one of Glinka's or Techaikowsky's masterpieces, awaken and mobilize all the antique heroism, medieval chivalry and wild romance that lies dormant in the depths of men's being. There is more genuine pleasure in being the spectator of a soul-thrilling dance like that than in taking an active part in the lifeless make believes performed at society balls in many of the more western countries of Europe.—[London Telegraph. and to have experience of one is to be acquainted with the type, for they differ only in degree. How to Suppress the Mosquito.

RDERS issued by the government of India to civil surgeons with entomological proclivities require them "to take collections of mosquitoes and other flies that bite men or animals, in accordance with the instructions contained in Prof. Ray Lanketer's pamphlet," with a view of determining the possible connection of malaria and mosquitoes. For the general destruction of mosquitoes several methods have been tried. In many places the engineer has been successful by draining the marshy areas. In others the use of kerosene, by throwing it into the water, where it forms a film on the surface, has prevented the developing larvae from reaching the air, and has thus brought about their destruction. A more recent experiment has been the employment of permanganate of potash, which is said to kill the insect in all stages of its development. As this chemical has also been largely employed for purifying the water of doubtful wells, and especially with the view of protecting against the cholera bacillus, it would seem particularly applicable for use in India.—[Indian Correspondence London Lancet. flies that bite men or animals, in accordance with the -[Indian Correspondence London Lancet.

Relics Seven Thousand Years Old,

ROF. Flinders Petrie, who goes every winter to 'spoil the Egyptians" of their prehistoric remains has opened his usual exhibition in University College. The relics are chiefly from twenty miles of old cemeteries along the western desert from Hu to Den-derch, and range from the prehistoric to the Roman period. The chief discovery of the year is the Libvan settlements in Egypt at the close of the middle kingdom about 2400 B. C. The Libyan graves are shallow, circular pits about four feet across and two feet deep. In "pan" graves the bodies lie in a contracted posias in prehistoric graves, but not all in the same direction.

The Libyan pottery is partly identical with that of the twelfth Egyptian dynasty, and partly red or black, like the prehistoric, but of other forms. The Egyptian pottery and heads of these graves are twelfth dynasty, and fix the age of the Libyan invasion. The fronts of pottery and neads of thesis graves are twenth dynasty, and fix the age of the Libyan invasion. The fronts of animal skulls, for example, oxen, sheep, goats, daubed with red and black paint, were also found in the cemeteries. In some graves over one hundred were found together. The backs of the skulls were cut away so that they could be hung up like Greek bucrania, which probably originated in Libya. The prehistoric Egyptians, who were mainly of Libyan race, also had the custom of hanging up skulls over the doorways of buildings. Prof. Petric remarks that native plunderers had destroyed many Egyptian cemeteries last winter to get objects for tourists, and thus "perishes the history of 7000 years, while transient politicians disagree."—[London Globe.

A Snake Trust

HERE have been reports every day for some time past of all kinds of trusts and combinations of commercial enterprises, but if rumors are true Rochester will soon have a trust unique in its character. A company is being organized for the purpose of raising rat tlesnakes to extract from them their medicinal properties and put them on the market in unlimited quanerties and put them on the market in unlimited quantities. One of the prime movers for the organization of the company, of course, is 'Rattlesnake Pete' Gruber, whose reputation as a past master in the knowledge of all that pertains to snakes of all descriptions is by no means limited by the boundaries of this city, or even this State.

Pete was approached recently on the subject of the "snake trust." No one could be more serious in the project than he.

Pete was approached recently on the subject of the "snake trust." No one could be more serious in the project than he.

"Such a company," he said, "is under way, and has every appearance of being a big success. For several years back I have had numerous offers of different kinds to put my goods on the market, but when you go to the bottom of these elaborate offers they were willing to pay me a good price for the use of my name and lithograph, but when it came to the merits of the goods they didn't seem to care whether it contained any of the healing properties of the snake or lake water. The present company will be composed of business men, and not schemers, and it is now my anticipation to leave in early July for the South, and not only bring back a goodly supply of rattlers, but make arrangements for further shipments. We will fit up what you might call a farm for the raising and breeding of the snakes. It will no doubt be located in the suburbs of Rochester, and the novelty of having a snake farm in our locality will doubtless attract a good deal of attention."

It is the intention of the company to put upon the market not only the snake oil, valuable as a liniment, but the snake skins, which are shed three times annually, and which are said to possess great medicinal qualities.

It is also stated that within a short time there will

It is also stated that within a short time there will be established a small sanitarium in this city for the treatment of goitre alone. The goitre cure, which is effected by use of a live snake, has been handled with no small amount of success within the last few months, and so great is the demand on the part of the patients that the sanitarium has become a positive necessity.—[Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Lost Thirty-five Years.

LETTER was received in Fitchburg recently which furnished startling news to Frank H. Barter of No. 15 Brandon avenue. Just about thirty-five years ago he left on a sailing vessel. He was a sea captain in those days, and very soon after he bid his wife and child a fond farewell and sailed away for a foreign port, news reached them of the wreck of his vessel. Sections of it were picked up along the coast of Massachusetts, and it was supposed that all on board had been lost, nothing having been heard from any of the crew.

Mrs. Barter was left with her son, then about a year old, in anything but comfortable circumstances. It was necessary to send the latter to a home for children in Boston, where he received proper care. Later he was taken into a family, and went to live with them in Kansas.

Roosevelt and the Ruffian.

ESIDES making three excellent speeches here today, Gov. Roosevelt did something in the athletic line that has made him a hero in the eyes of every farmer in Wyoming county.

Finally, a small passage was opened, but as the Governor approached this door a huge fellow sta-tioned himself in the doorway and would not move. Several men tried to make him move, but he would not Instantly Gov. Roosevelt took in the situation, and,

and clutching him by the neck, sent him sprawling outside the building.

It was all done so quickly the easy-going farmers did not know what happened until it was all over and the Governor was in his carriage. In the bout the Governor's eyeglasses fell off, and as he adjusted them and pulled himself together he remarked in his emphatic way:

"By George, that feliow is a cool dog!"

The crowd cheered as the Governor was driven away, and then a great scramble was made after the fellow he had taken by the neck. But while the farmers were marveling over the Governor's athletic achievement the "cool dog" had skulked away.—[Silver Lake \N. Y.,) Correspondence New York World.

President Kruger's Biblical Quotations.

RESIDENT KRUGER, as is well known, is fond of backing up his opinions by Scriptural reference But it is not matter of common knowledge that His Honor's quotations from the Bible are often inaccurate. On this point a South African correspondent of the London Daily News says: "I have often enough heard him quote passages to prove his points, but his quotations have been misquotations. When I was a boy I had to learn my Bible thoroughly, so I could tell his errors. Sir Bartle Frere found him out, too. Did you never hear the story? When Sir Bartle Frere came down from Zululand, at the time the Transwal was British territory, and just before the breaking out of the rebellion, he and Kruger had a conference. The men who were there tell me that at the beginning Kruger started quoting Scripture. But Sir Bartle had two texts ready for every one of his, and, not content with that, Sir Bartle carefully pointed out to him how each one of his texts was misquoted, and bore quite a different meaning from that he put on it. Figally, Kruger stopped altogether, and sat gazing in wonder at Sir Bartle's apparently unending stock of verses from the Bible."—[Pittsburgh Dispatch. curate. Campaign Against Slang.

ENTUCKY club women have undertaken a crusade against slang. The federation of that State has prepared a petition that is to be sent to school principals and teachers, asking their cooperation with the Council of Club Presidents to secure a more careful use of English. The petition further declares that the great amount of ungrammatical and poor English and slang so constantly heard in the home, the schoolroom and on the street is an offense to the ear that should not exist.

The petition might have gone still further and spoken of the torture to sensitive ears of flat or shrill, unmodulated voices rolling out careless, slovenly speech, in which syllables are cut off or cut out, and the sound of honest, necessary letters willfully ignored. The possibilities of the speaking voice are yet only half understood. There is still hope, however, that parents will one day see the importance of spending much time on the cultivation of the conversational voices of their sons and daughters.—[New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Peculiarities of the Patent Office.

PROBABLY the most noticeable thing in connection with applications for patents, a Washington man says, is the decreased interest shown in bicycle machinery by inventors. That was the rage for two or three years, and thousands of patents were taken out on bicycle and licycle devices of one sort or another. on bicycle and licycle devices of one sort or another. The ingenuity of man in that specialty seems to have been exhausted. At any rate, the patent office is having a rest. Chemists and metallurgists are patiently working upon processes for the more economical reduction of ores and the handling of metals, but this is a somewhat limited field, and the importance of the investigations being conducted therein cannot be measured by the number of applications for patents on processes. The Spanish-American war gave a great impulse last year in experimentation in guns, gun carriages, etc. Interest in that line appears to be dying out.—[Kansas City Journal.

To Care for Confederate Graves,

ONGRESSMAN JAMES R. MANN of Chicago has prepared a bill to be introduced at the next session of Congress authorizing the Secretary of War to enter into a contract with the Oakwoods Cemetery Asociation for the improvement and ornamentation of 'Confederate mound" in Oakwood Cemetery, where the bodies of twelve union and 4039 Confederate soldiers are buried. The cost of the improvement is estimated at $3850. The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to make further expenditure for the care of the burlal ground, not to exceed $250 a year.

"Confederate mound" was purchased by the government soon after the civil war, and the bodies of the Union and Confederate soldiers who died in Camp Douglas, and who were buried in the Chicago City Cemetery, were removed and buried in the lot in 1867. When the lot was purchased it was in the unimproved part of the cemetery, and was something of a mound compared with the surrounding low ground. Since that time the adjacent ground has been improved, until now the Confederate mound is several feet lower than the ground surrounding it. A monument has been erected in the center of the lot, which is its lowest point. It is preposed to take down the monument temporarily, raise the ground five or six feet, and give it a gradual slope, plant some trees in place of the trees that successive storms have blown down, and lay water pipes for sprinkling the grass and watering the trees.

Mr. Mann says his attention was called to the neglected condition of the lot last Memorial day, and he has since had correspondence with the War Department and the cemetery officials on the subject. He easy he has no doubt Congress will pass the bill.—[Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Knightly Postman.

CERTAIN illustrious signor in Italy was gazet ted as a "Knight of the Crown," but no sooner was the distinction conferred than the government discovered that the new knight was a person of dubious character. With the native skill of the Italian diplomat, seeing that the distinction could not be recalled, the government at once sought for some one of the same name as the signor. The only person who qualified was a young postman, and he is now elevated to the rank of Knight of the Crown. What a magnificent and high imperial rat-a-tat-tat he will deliver.—

Mr. Browning's Venetian Studio.

OBERT BARRETT BROWNING is translating into brick and marble the check sent him by the publishers of his parents' love-letters. He is building himself a new studio in Venice, and that is just what the married poets would have wished. With a studio of his own arranging, Barrett Browning will resume again his long-discarded brushes, with results which the publie will watch with interest, if only because he is the child of his parents. His works have at least the "liter-ary interest' in a sense of the term rather different from the usual. Motorman's Lung.

THE newest disease, Motorman's lung, which does not confine itself to motormen exclusively, is fined as a weakening or degeneration of the lung tissues. Breathing is so easy on a rushing trolley, the wind is so strong and pure and cool, that the lung muscles have practically no work to do, and at once, like all unused things, they shrink. In the treatment of Motorman's lung drugs are of no value, the Philadelphia Record's expert says. Lung exercise is the only remedy, and the patient is advised to breathe as little and lightly as possible while on the trolley platform, and as much and as deeply as he can at other times. The disease takes a milder form in the passenger's case and an abstinence from trolley rides will cure it in week; but the motorman can never be promised a absolute cure.

Railways in Asia Minor.

The Novoe Vremya declares that if Germany carries out this project it will thereby become a great power, since it will thus hold in its hands the key of the Old World. Russia is, therefore, called upon to act in time, with the view of protecting its threatened interests. Two important factors escaped the attention of that Russian military expert; he did not foresee that enterprise from another quarter might anticipate Russia's intentions in Asia Minor, and he overlooked the fact that the financial condition of Russia was not likely for many years to come to be in a position to meet the ever-increasing demands made upon it.

The Burial of the Parsees.

E REFERRED the other day to the controversy that is going on among the Parsees about the advisability of having a cemetery for burying their dead instead of exposing them to be devoured by birds, which is the ancient custom. The orthodox are, of course, violently in favor of the old custom, and quote course, violently in favor of the old custom, and quote their ancient law book called the Vendidad, which enjoins exposure and forbids burial. We have no desire to enter into the merits of the controversy, but as the Vendidad has been freely quoted by Parsee priests and others, who seem to take a firm stand upon its precepts, we may remark that this ancient code of laws if full of strange precepts which are entirely impracticable in these days. we may remark that this ancient code of laws it full of strange precepts which are entirely impracticable in these days. The Parsees themselves have ceased to be guided by it in nearly overy point except this of the disposal of the dead and a few others.

The dog, for instance, is treated in the Vendidad as on the same level with man, and two whole chapters are devoted to him. If a dog dies, his carcass, or, rather, we should say, his corpse, is to be disposed of with the same elaborate ritual as that of a man. If a man kills a water dog his punishment is 10,000 stripes with the priestly whip. Nay, it is safer to kill a man than to serve bad food to a shepherd's dog, for the man slayer gets off with ninety strips, whereas the bad master of the dog is a great sinner and will receive 200 stripes.

Then the Vendidad lays down the law about the fees to be paid to the doctor for healing the sick, and the present day Parsee, if he is consistent, ought to follow the following scale laid down in chapter VII: "A healer shall heal a priest for a holy blessing; he shall heal the master of a house for the value of an ox of low value; he shall heal the lord of a borough for the value of an ox of average value; he shall heal the lord of a carrier and four; he exists of the stript of the value of an ox of the value of an ox of the value of an exprise for the value of a chariot and four; he ox of average value; he shall heal the lord of a town for the value of an ox of high value; he shall heal the lord of a province for the value of a chariot and four; he shall heal the wife of the master of a house for the value of a she ass." And the Vendidad also advises him about what kind of healer to choose: "If several hea'ers offer themselves together, O Zoroaster, namely, one who heals with the knife, one who heals with the holy word, it is the last one who will best drive away sickness from the body of the faithful."—[Allahabad Pioneer Mail

DISGUISES FOR OLD CLOTHES,

CAN BE COAXED TO LOOK AS GOOD AS NEW BY A FEW IMPROVEMENTS.

From a Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Aug. 28 .- The purchase of feminine plumage for the autumn campaign has already begun, sample collections are on the wing and last winter's coats and gowns are rising from their long camphor sleep for inspection and overhauling.

There are two or three invaluable means now offered by which a perfectly good, but somewhat demode stuff dress of the past winter can be coaxed cheerfully again into hard service this autumn under a well-nigh impenetrable alias. One disguise is effectively done with velvet, another by scalloping wherever that device can be ventured and a third is the adding of a bolero front or whole figaro pocket. If a skirt is a trifle the worse for wear at the bottom, cut it in a series of scallops, bind the edges of the scallops with a narrow band of black velvet, or velvet in the same tone as the goods, and then permit the refreshened border to fall on a straight velvet band that artfully appears to be the bottom of a rich under skirt.

Should you have a smart skirt of plain green or brown cloth left over and you wish a waist for it, hie away to one of the shops where they are already getting in their fall goods, and buy some of the new Caledonian plaid camel's hair for a body to your dress, because you must bear in mind that this is to be a fall and winter of combination gowns. again into hard service this autumn under a well-nigh

Rough-faced goods will be worked up with satin surfaced cloths, crepons of the most corrugated face are to be draped over glistening peau de suede silks, antique velvet is the proper mate for lady's melton and the smartest black silk gowns will show heavy incrustations stitched on black cloth, in odd figures or running wreath patterns.

Winter Use of Lace.

Winter Use of Lace.

Every resource will be exhausted in order to enable us to escape from any use of braids while the more lace there is appropriately introduced in a costume the nearer the perfection of the momentary style is gained. Looking over a series of the earliest models one finds lace without exception introduced in yokes or vests, revers, collars, or scarf-like drapery around the top of every cloth basque and heavy time yellow lace is the unvarying choice of the dressmakers. Imitation antique gulpure, old yellow Bucks lace and an artistic arrangement of narrow braid on coarse cream net, called Spanish point, are those that combine most happily with rough or smooth, dark materials. None of these are prohibitively expensive despite their air of mellow richness, and milliners now feel free to say that many of the most captivating hats and bonnets will owe all their splendor to lace frills and bows and strings.

By the way, it is essential to drop a word here apropos

of things most especially as they relate to bonnets, for to wear them or not to wear them is a sleep-destroying problem to many women who wish their toilets to ex-press the last sentiment of the flying day. Here and now let it be understood that strings are no longer on probation, but for the next six months will be an active force for beauty in feminine dress, and the smartest little bonnet is put on with one continuous strap or scarf, made of a fold of velvet lined with satin, or a scarf of lace. One end of the lace or velvet is permanently fastened to the back of the bonnet, the height of the scarf is then carried down under the chin and up the opposite side of the head, concluding in a small rosette and pinned to the bonnet's rear, alongside the owner end, forming a part of the headgear's ornamentation. By this device the bonnet is held on snugly and to ninety-nine out of a hundred women the straight band under the chin is far more becoming than the ends knotted to a full pon pon under one ear.

A last piquant little touch to this coquettish topknot is a big, brightly-jeweled broach, fastened in the smoothly drawn string a little to one side, and some women, who affect many fine expressions of daintiness, will pin one very sweet flower on the tulle scarf that anchors a wide hat so securely.

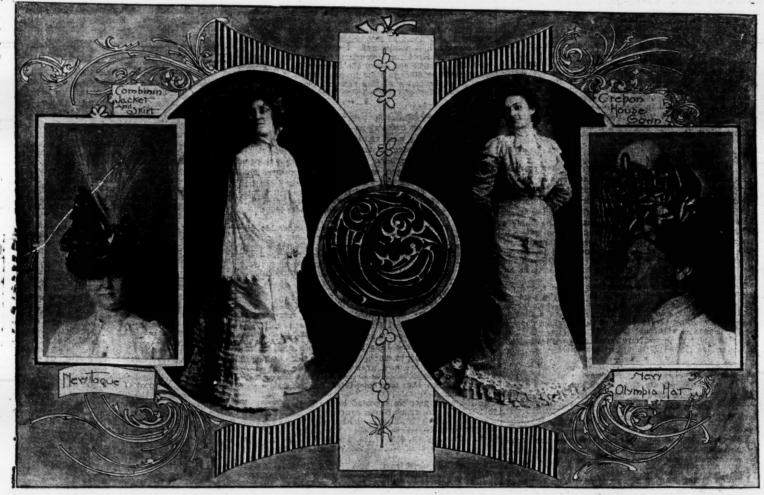

Genuine Novelties.

There is more genuine novelty in the wraps of cloth and fur designed for the autumn clothes market than in either the gowns or hats that are already casting their shadows before them. None of the fashionable newcomers at the furriers or cloakmakers are braided. newcomers at the furriers or cloakmakers are braided. The whole creed of decoration is cloth stitched on cloth and fur on cloth. Not one of the new coats or capes makes the slightest pretense of fitting the figure. What the English call box and what the French volante shape wraps are being pushed for popularity most vigorously by the manufacturers and the chances are just even whether this style, so frequently and emphatically rejected and despised by women will now be accepted. Clumsily large capes of the same type as were wore last winter are eligible for use in the coming season, and the handsomest are made of thick, sleek-surfaced dark cloth with broad borders of gray and brown fur and finished by tall Kaiser collars. Another mode shows a cape with long Kersey skirts to the hem of the dress and then over this to the hip falls another cape of fur and it is perfectly patent that the long-haired pelts are to be first in the hearts of our country women this year.

New Cuts for Long Clonks.

Long cloth coats that might easily be called ulsters and made of broadcloth, Viouna or Venetian cloth, are out on the Chesterfield or Ragan pattern, as those for men are modeled; their pockets are ample and the one feminine suggestion is the tall, up-rolled collar, often lined with mole's fur that gives the tenderest, most grateful touch to the face possible, and the smoked pearl-gray color, of which forms a soft, becoming background for the face. The majority of these long coats are made to fasten with the buttons out of sight, or one or two very choice cut steel disks hold the fronts together and twinkle in the soft, deep hair.

There is a pretty fashion coming in of using bullet-shaped buttons of brass as trimmings on sleeves and yokes and the fronts of cloth suits. These are copies of the buttons that small boys in livery wear and they are not the first brass ornaments that have crept into women's wardrobes. Some of the handsomest of the new umbrellas have initials in brass sunk in the wood of their handles, monograms on leather purses are made of tall, ekeleton brass letters and brass-bound traveling bags. Shopping bags and brass-headed hat pins are among the most attractive novelties. Brass is evidently the successor to much of the popularity accorded to gun metal and by treating it to a high polish and overlaying it with a peculiar lacquer it neither loses its luster nor conveys any ugly odor to the hands.

MARY DEAN.

THE PRIESTS AND THE "GADFLY,"

MRS. VOYNICH TALKS ABOUT THE RECEPTION OF HER BOOK BY RELIGIOUS PEOPLE.

By a Special Contributor.

"My intention was to write a drama when I first thought out the plot of "The Gadfly,'" said Mrs. Ethel Lillian Voynich the other day, when asked to talk about the novel which has made her famous. She has come over from London to superintend staging of the dramatization of her book, and is stopping with friends in the country near New York. City life, that is, New York City life, gets on her nerves, so her manager says, and makes her ill. She is as tall, as fragile-looking and as fair as a lily, has beautiful curling blonde hair, a sweet mouth, gentle, lovable manners.

"I didn't think of my drama in connection with the stage, however; I only thought to get it published as a drama. I felt far too ignorant of the technique of the stage to accomplish anything in that line. You see, I had not even an experience with amateur theatricals to fall back on, as so many writers of plays have. After I began to write 'The Gadfly,' instead of its growing into a drama it became the novel. And I assure you it is so different from the play which we are so busily preparing for the stage that I scarcely like you to think of it as a dramatization. The play is as I first conceived the plot, while the book is totally different. The same characters appear under the same names, but one could never call it an adaptation.

"I am often amused and sometimes annoyed when persons tell me that, although well received as a book. The Gadfly' will not be a success as a play owing to the religious questions involved. I wish they could read numerous letters of commendation I have received from various persons belonging to the Catholic church, several of them ordained priests. One which particularly pleased me was from a dignitary of importance in the church, a priest of unusual attainments. He wrote thanking me for the pleasure he had found in reading 'The Gadfly,' and commended highly the truthfulness with which I had drawn my characters. Not one word of disapprobation for the religious ylews expressed nor the positions in which the religious ylews expressed nor the positions in which the religious person-one word of disapprobation for the religious views expressed nor the positions in which the religious personages appeared. I was sure when I read his first letter that he had grasped my ideas exactly.

"That letter was but the beginning; since then I have had the pleasure of meeting and knowing him intimately, and I assure you I number him among my warmest friends. Another friendship I greatly prize and which began pretty much in the same way, is that of a Catholic priest living in one of your western States. He is not only pleased with the novel, but expresses great interest in the play, and has entire faith in its success.

"Don't understand me, however, to say that all Catholics or even Protestants, approved of my book. On the contrary, I have received many violently abusive letters, but have found that the writers misnterpreted the character of the cardinal. I did not intend Monunderstand me, tanelli as a type and certainly not as a selfish, ambitious man, but rather a lovable, erring human being. He originated wholly in my own brain, and was not drawnfrom life, as so many persons seem to fancy. Personally I cannot understand any one regarding the padre as self-seeking or cruel. None of us are perfect, but certainly that man, as I intended him to appear, is as nearly without faults as any one can be. "You ask which was my favorite, Arthur or the Padre? Did you ever hear a mother own to having a favorite child? Well, that is the way I feel about those characters. That book is my chick, my first born, and at present my only one, so you must forgive me if I cannot consider one hero more beautiful, more worthy of admiration, than the other.

"Yes, I will write other books; indeed, am writing one now, but I compose so slowly it will be some time before it is ready for publication. "The Gadfly' was the result of thirteen years' thought and labor. Not that I was that length of time actually writing it, but between my first thought of it and its publication, thirteen years elapsed.

tween my first thought of it and its publication, thirteen years elapsed.

"The hero in my next book will not be the least bit like Arthur, nor will I touch upon religious subjects in any form whatever; more than that I do not care to say, for its publication is a long way off. I think in my heart of hearts I have a greater affection for the play than the novel. You see, a drama was my first conception, and I have always had the greatest desire to write a good one. I hope the public will like it; it pleases all of us to have our efforts appreciated, and I have worked hard and traveled many miles that the play might be perfect in each detail. Even the photographs for costumes and scenery were taken directly under my eyes, and I am hoping the result will reward my trouble."

SLANGY, SAUCY, BUT SELF-RELIANT.

"The typical East Side girl of New York," writes Charles T. Brodhead in the September Ladies' Home Journal, "is simply a product of her environments. She is surrounded by the good, bad and indifferent. She is in an atmosphere in which no girl should be reared. Her eyes and ears are closed to many disagreeable things around her. And she shuts them simply because things around her. And she shuts them simply because she does not care to see and hear. Yet the East Side girl is no saint. Far from it. The typical girl of that section is self-reliant, saucy, impertinent, slangy, quick-tempered, ready to fight with the tongue, and even with fists if necessary. She will dance all night and work all day, repeat it three or four times a week, then declare she isn't tired, and look bright and fresh all the while. She will upbraid her mother, whom she calls 'me ole woman;' and abuse her father, referred to by her as 'me ole man;' cuff the ears of her younger brothers; have a hair-pulling match with a sister; yet if any one should dare utter a word derogatory to the members of her family, 'Miss East Side' would go at them like a wildcat. She flirts outrageously with motormen, conductors and the like, and will laugh derisively at or slap the face of the well-dressed man who risively at or slap the face of the well-dressed man who presumes to become acquainted with her on the street; remain night after night at the bedside of a girl friend who is ill, and follow a begging cripple half a block to give her last cent for charity."

HOW TO STOP WORRYING.

THERE IS SAID TO BE A SURE WAY IF YOU WILL ONLY MAKE YOURSELF THINK SO.

"The usual way people set about stopping worry is a wrong one," writes Mary Boardman Page in the September Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If a doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying, the patient is likely to say impatiently: 'Oh, doctor, don't I wish that I could! But I can't. If doctor, don't I wish that I could! But I can't. If I could have stopped worrying a year ago I would not be ill now!—all of which is probably perfectly true. And the doctor does not always know how to help him, because both doctor and patient have an idea that it is possible to repress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else. "Let me illustrate this by figures. Suppose you were to go into a completely dark room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in buckets and carry it out at the door? Not at all. You would just open the windows and shutters and let in the blessed suntight. You would replace the darkness with light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worry attitude of mind with the non-worry attitude. And this can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let Nature have her own perfect way with him."

HOW PICTURES SHOULD BE HUNG.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS ON THIS SUB-JECT OFFERED BY MISS PARLOA.

"To hang and properly group pictures is not an matter," writes Maria Parloa in the Ladies' Home Journal. "To succeed, one must have a good eye for distances, for straight lines, and for harmony in grouping, as well as a fund of patience—putting up and taking down each picture, or set of pictures, until the position height and grouping are perfectly satisfactory
"There are two kinds of picture wire—one i other is silvered. The gilt is more flexible, and remains untarnished and flexible longer than the silvered, but it is untarnished and flexible longer than the silvered, but it is also more expensive. Extremely heavy pictures should be hung with copper wire.

"The picture hooks should be broad and well'curved, that they may hold firmly to the molding and be a secure support for the wire. A yardstick or tape measure is indispensable, as careful measuring will lessen the labor and assure accuracy of position.

ure is indispensable, as careful measuring will lessen the labor and assure accuracy of position.

"A picture should be so hung that the bottom shall lie flat and the top be thrown forward slightly. The manner in which the screw-eyes are put in produces the effect. For a small picture they should be fastened two or three inches from the top of the frame; the larger the picture the greater should be the distance of the screw-eyes from the top.

"If the room be high it is easy to make it appear lower by fastening the picture molding two of more feet below the celling. This can be done only when the wall finish is the same all the way up, or when the frieze is deep. When there is the space of several feet above the molding small pictures and bas-reliefs in plaster are effective."

AN ODORLESS WINDOW KITCHEN.

NEAT LITTLE INVENTION FOR HOUSEKEEPING IN A ROOM WITHOUT CONVENIENCES.

By a Special Contributor.

A neat little window kitchen is the invention of an ingenious woman who was compelled to do light housekeeping in one room in which there were no modern improvements. After struggling for some months with a small table and a gas stove, she discovered that no matter how much care was exercised, light housekeeping would leave heavy odors. They were always there to tell the tale after meals had been cleared, and the gas stove, pots and pans had been carefully hidden away. But she finally hit upon a plan that makes light housekeeping odorless, easy and practical, even if the keeper has only one small room.

She has a little box kitchen built outside of the lower part of her window. In this there were two shelves, the lower for a gas stove and the upper for a variety of culinary utensils. The window kitchen is a miniature extension, and can be made out of a strong pine packing box and attached outside of almost any ordinary window. It must be firmly screwed to the woodwork on either side, and the top slanted and covered with tar paper. A row of holes about an inch in diaemeter should be bored through each partition of the miniature kitchen, to assure good ventilation and to carry out the steam and odors that come from cooking. A hole must also be bored in the lower sash of the window, large enough for a gas tube to pass through, and be connected with the nearest gas jet. This allows the window to be raised without interfering with the tube. She has a little box kitchen built outside of the lower

In warm weather the upper shelf of the window kitchen can be used as a receptacle for food to complete the kitchen arrangements. Inside the room the inventor had a window sea abuilt and upholstered. The upholstery and hangings could be removed while the meal was being prepared and the seat used as a table, while the drawers and compartments and cupboards built underneath served as a receptacle for dishes and table linen. She hung a neat little pair of curtains from the middle sash of the window, which could be moved back and forth when the stove was in operation.

After the dishes had been washed and restored to their shelves and cupboards, the upholstered seat is put back and the end of the couch piled up with pillows. The curtains are drawn, and no one would ever know that a meal has been prepared. The window kitchen in no way interferes with the ventilation of the room, as the upper window can be slid up and down at will.

PAT IN A DENTIST'S CHAIR.

PAT IN A DENTIST'S CHAIR.

[London Tit-Bits:] The sight of a row of forceps has closed the mouths of many sufferers, even after they had seated themselves in the dentist's chair. Dental surgeons anticipate this, and the following amusing instance of how an obstinate Irishman was made to show his teeth may not be amiss:

Pat came to the dentist's with his jaw very much swollen from a tooth he desired to have pulled. But when the suffering son of Erin got into the dentist's chair and saw the gleamig pair of forceps approaching his face he positively refused to open his mouth.

The dentist quietly told his page boy to prick his patient with a pin, and when Pat opened his mouth to yell, the dentist seized the tooth, and out it came.

"It didn't hurt you as much as you expected it would, did it?" the dentist asked smilling.

"Well, no," replied Pat, hesitatingly, as if doubting the truthfulness of his admission. "But," he added, placing his hand on the spot where the boy pricked him with the pin, "begorra, little did I think the roots would reach down like that."

A TEACHER'S VALUE TO THE PUBLIC.

"What the teacher is counts for much more than what she knows. A love of children, unlimited tact and infinite patience are the necessary natural endowments," writes Caroline B. Le Row in the September Ladies' Home Journal. "Of course, the ability to teach implies the possession of an education, though no amount of education alone can make a good teacher. While plies the possession of an education, though no amount of education alone can make a good teacher. While all teachers must know more than they teach, the power to impart to others is the important matter, and the one in which tact or ingenuity is absolutely the prime requisite. Moreover, she should be personally a social, intellectual and moral force in the community. The physician and the clergyman have immense opportunities for this uplifting of humanity, yet their advantages are small when compared with those of the teacher, which are practically unlimited. Encouragement and satisfaction in this field of labor never can be dependent upon results, for it is seldom that the teacher is permitted to know what the years of maturity owe to faithful care of the youthful days. The teacher's time is always one of seed-sowing, never of harvest."

REMEMBER THIS WHEN MARKETING.

"To insure success in catering for a small family, attention must be given to the marketing and to the arrangement of quantities; otherwise the family will be eating beef, mutton or chicken four or five days in succession." writes Mrs. Rorer in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Materials should be so arranged that the left-overs will come in between the newly cooked dinner dishes. For instance if you have a steak today do not over swill come in between the newly cooked dishes. For instance, if you have a steak today do not have it warmed over for the next day's dinner; but, instead, have chicken, and the following day use the left-over beef, and the day following that the left-over chicken. Arrange to have guests for luncheon the day following the largest meat dish. If you have roasted thickers. Therefore, there is no strength of the day to the form the company of the strength of chicken. Arrange to have guests for luncheon the day following the largest meat dish. If you have roasted chicken on Tuesday night for dinner, have company on Wednesday at noon; then you may have chicken croquettes or chicken patties as the main luncheon dish. In this way persons of limited means may entertain without adding to the cost of living. A clever housewife may do wonders by arranging menus in this way."

THE GREEN BOY FROM "HARRAH."

STORY OF A VISITOR FROM A PLANET WHERE BOYS EAT THE MULTIPLICATION TABLE.

By a Special Contributor

H, HOW it rained! And how the wind blew! Sandy McMichael stood at the window of his bedroom, wondering whether there would be another flood, and rather hoping that there would be, because he would like to see the animals going by two by two. It had rained for three days. He had read until he was tired, he had played with his lead soldier suntil he had fought three Spanish wars and had never lost an American, and now he was ripe for the fellowship of any

He poered up into the sky at the large drops that grew larger as they descended and wished that he might be a drop of rain to have such a lovely long jump from the clouds to the earth. It would be better than jumping off of the rafters in the barn. Hullo! there was a drop way up that must be the great-grandfather of the How high it was and how it was growing. opened the window to watch it better and the next minute a funny-looking little boy with a skin as green as a maple leaf in midsummer and wearing a silken cloak of the color of old gold, landed on his feet upon the carpet beside Saffdy.
"I've done if at last," said he in a piping voice that, while not unmusical, was different from any that Sandy while not unmusical, was different from any that Sandy had ever heard.

"Where'd you come from?" he asked the little chap.

"From Harrah," was the reply. He was just about Sandy's size, but more slender, and his head was nearly twice as big. His eyes were yellow and shone like electric lights. His hair was a lighter shade of green than his body, and his hips were straw color, uncanny looking, and yet not unhandsome, and decidedly friendly, for he rubbed Sandy's cheeks with his long, slender hands and made a cooing noise that evidently meant "I like you."

hands and made a cooing noise that when the you."

I like you."

"Where's Harrah?" asked Sandy, but beyond pointing to the sky, the green boy did not explain. Probably he had come from a star and Harrah was what he called it. It is unlikely that the people who live in the stars know what we call them and if a man came from Mars and was asked: "Well, how did you leave the folks at Mars?" he wouldn't understand, and indeed might answer: "All well, including Ma."

Sandy, who always took things as they came, said: "Let's play checkers."

swer: "All well, including Ma."
Sandy, who always took things as they came, said:
"Let's play checkers."
"All right," said the green boy, who certainly spoke good every-day English, although he had what was evidently a Harrahian accent.

"Oh, dear," said the little visitor suddenly, "I forgot to eat my history lesson before I came down and if I don't know it tomorrow my teacher will make me eat more geography than is good for me just to punish me. Have you a history cake anywhere around?"

"A wh-a-at?" asked Sandy in amazement.

"A history cake. What do you call them? How would you learn your history lesson?"

"By studying so hard it would make me hate it," answered Sandy promptly. He was just taking up Greek history and lest all the good marks that American history had earned for him just because he wasn't interested in what a lot of dead Greeks had done.

"How funny," said the green boy, "But I supposed that things would be different up here."

"You mean down here." said Sandy.

"No, I den't," said the green boy, suddenly leaping up three feet and sitting in midair, as easily as if he were on a seat. "I came up here from down there." pointing to the sky, "and we learn things down there by eating them. We have a speller that is in ten cakes and a bite is a lesson. There are about a hundred bites to a cake and when you've eaten all the cakes you know how to spell."

"Oh, don't I wish that I could learn my lessons that

"Oh, don't I wish that I could learn my lessons that way. Say, what is your name?"

"Jorroel," said the green boy.

"Mine is Sandy. Say, Jorroel, how do you sit that way—on nothing?"

"Why. I make up my mind to do it and then it comes easy. Down in Harrah we can do whatever we make up nur minds to do." easy. Down inds to do."
"But, eay," said Sandy. "Do you like to eat those

"Of course. Our parents think that it is best for us to learn all we can about spelling and reading and typewriting and arithmetic and this far distant planet that lights our night, and so they make the cakes as nice as they can be so that we'll like to learn things. I think that history cake is the best of the lot, because it's so nice and sour, but grammar cake I don't much like because it's sweet and boys don't like sweet things."

"Oh, don't they though? We earthly boys do. But, say, can't you take me up or down to Harrah and bring me back before bedtime?"

"Why, I can if you don't weigh more than fifty pounds. I can make up my mind to go back to Harrah and take

"Why, I can if you don't weigh more than fifty pounds. I can make up my mind to go back to Harrah and take you on my back if you're under fifty in weight. If you weigh more than that I can't budge you."

"I weigh forty-seven." said Sandy.

"Then get on my back," said Jorroel, jumping down from his invisible perch. Sandy did so and then Jorroel climbed upon the window ledge and made up his mind as hard as he could to go back to Harrah.

The next minute they were rushing through the air at a speed that would have made the Empire State express turn as green through envy as Jorroel was. It press turn as green through envy as Jorroel was. It may have been five minutes, but it didn't seem more than that many seconds before they had landed at Harrah in the midst of an undulating meadow of lovely pink grass. Beautiful butterflies that flamed like different seconds. pink grass. Beautiful butterflies that flamed like dif-ferent colored lights and that sang more sweetly than nightingales, flew round and round in circles until Sandy felt dizzy and said so. Then they turned and flew the other way. He soon found out that this thought-fulness of other's feelings characterized, every living thing in Harrah, which he imagined to be Mars, al-though he had no means of knowing.

All around them globular dwellings full of windows floated in the air and Jorroel told him that this was get them."

A few feet above where they were standing was a round house, not unlike a bubble, and like a bubble it floated hither and thither, not being fastened to the ground and yet not going very far in any direction. Jorroel explained that the ground was so fertile that they did not like to waste it by using it to set houses upon, so the houses were all built in the air. Sandy found that he could walk upon the air to it as easily as he could tread solid ground on earth, and he accompanied his friend to it. A pretty green woman, not much bigger than Jorroel, and wearing a cloak made of a crimson, cob-webby stuff, sat at a table reading a book.

"Mamma, I've been to Sush at last. I knew I could do it if I made up my mind hard enough. And I've brought back a little boy from there and he's hungry and wants to read some dinner."

Jorroel's mother came over and rubbed Sandy's cheeks, which seemed to be the Harrahian way of saluting one. Then she said, without being surprised that he had come so far: "You must be hungry. Read whatever you want. You'll find the books on the shelf there."

Sandy stepped over to a bookcase and saw a number of books in English. One said roast beef, another said lemon pie, another was marked potatoes, and still others bore names that he had never heard of before and were probably foods that were peculiar to Harrah. It this important difference—he had a like ing it.

After lemon ple one doesn't care much about roast beef, so Sandy didn't read any of that.

It was growing dark. Sandy glanced out of the window and saw the earth just rising and flooding Harrah with lovely earth-light.

"That's where I came from, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes," answered Jorroel, going to a closet and getting out a faralan.

"We call it the earth," said Sandy, "but I suppose it's your moon?"

"Yes," said Jorroel's mother, "but we call your earth Sush."

a telescope, and he found that he could see New York through it.

"Now, if you want to learn something," said Jorroel's mother, "you might eat some arithmetic—that always comes in handy in any planet. Jorroel, get him the multiplication table up to five. I don't believe he knows it very well—if he's anything like you."

Jorroel went to the closet and returned in a moment with four sticks of what looked like candy to Sandy's earthly eyes. He found that they were sour, yet not unpleasant, but not a bit like candy. When he had eaten the last one he knew his tables up to five.

"I really think I must be going. Mamma will worry," said he.

"I really think I must be going. Mamma will worry," said he.

"I guess you can find your way back alone," said Jorroel. "Go just as you came, by the milky way. And come and see us often. I'll show you lots of things you never saw before and I'd like you to pay us a long visit if your mother doesn't object."

"Yes," said the mother, kindly, and then she rubbed his cheeks again and he followed Jorroel out doors, or rather out windows, because they don't have doors in Harrah. Jorroel took Sandy by the ankles and hurled him by main strength toward the rising earth, and a few moments of rushing space brought the boy to his window sill just as his dinner bell was ringing. He was so hungry after his trip that he was very glad to think that he would eat and not read dinner. On the way downstairs he asked himself how much four times four were, but he couldn't remember, and by the time he had been helped to everything eatable on the table his trip to Harrah was so hazy and dream-like that he said nothing to his parents about it. But he hoped that if it was a dream he would dream some more about it.

LEADER OF THE BOER ARMY.

GEN. P. J. JOUBERT TELLS HOW HE SHOOTS AT THE ENGLISH.

By a Special Contributor.

Gen. P. J. Joubert is the most celebrated fighter in South Africa. He is the commander-in-chief of the Boer army, and is looked on as the country's savior in the event of war being declared by the English. The general is 68 years old now, and scarred by many a wound from English bullet and native assagai. Yet he a North American Indian. He led the Boers at Mojuba Hill, where 280 English gave up their lives, Gen. Joubert losing but five men. He beat the English at Laings Nek, commanded the forces at Bronkhorst and Spruit, and finally caught Jameson-like a rat in a trap through quick mobilization of troops and superior marksma his native town and was called Jarratol. "Want to see where you came from?" he asked Sandy.

"Sure," said Sandy. I am sorry to say that he had several slang phrases that he would be glad to drop when he grew older and found how burr-like they were and as useless as burrs too.

"You can wait until night and look at it through a faralan. It's as yellow as my lips. Say, you must be hungry after your long ride. Come up to our house and read some dinner."

"Read it!" said Sandy. "You mean eat it."

Jorroel burst into a shrill laugh that sounded like the noise of a katydid. "We eat what we want to learn," said he, "but we read to keep ourselves from starving. What'll you read?"

"Some candy and pie," said Sandy at a venture.

"That's a good choice, I think. Come up and we'll get them."

A few feet story where they were stordier was a lime of their ears. This was taken up by the press which shows Oom Paul's diplomatic powers. They stand out in distinct contrast to Joubert, who is essentially a lover of powder.

Ten thousand Boers were gathered about the jail, speculating as to the fate of the prisoners. Some were for instant death, and others, as a grim joke, suggested outting off their ears. This was taken up by the press immediately, and in a few hours the world was shuddering at the bloodthirstiness of the Transvaal burghers. In the mean time the question was being settled by Oom Paul, who was trying to save the lives of the prisoners, and to this end used every art of persuasion with Joubert, the two being closted a whole night.

Oom Paul finally prevailed, and Joubert went out before the assembly to win them over to the lenient position. This was his speech: "Fellow burghers, if you had a beautiful flock of sheep and a neighbor's dogs got into the pasture and killed them, what would you do? Would you take your rifle and straightway proceed to shoot those dogs, thus making yourself liable to greater damage than the value of the sheep destroyed, or would you lay hold on those dogs and carry them to your neighbor, saying: 'Now, here's your dogs, I caught them in the act. Pay me and they shall be returned.'"

The general waited a moment for the words to take effect, and then added: "We have the neighbor's dogs in gaol. What shall we do with them?" There was hardly a voice dissented against returning the prisoners to the English, and events proved how wise the Boers had been.

Joubert can collect his whole army in forty-eight hours, a speedier mobilization than any other nation can boast of. He has divided the Transvaal into seventeen divisions, each under a commander. They are subdivided into sections, commanded by field cornets and assistant field cornets. When the toosin is sounded the officers ride from one farm to another until the whole country is warned. The Boer has rifle and ammunition ready, and a piece of "biltong," or dried beef, on which he can subsist for two weeks. He jumps on his horse and hurries to the gathering place, leaving the women to farm and herd the cattle.

Gen. Joubert knows the might of the English, but has little respect for their marksmanship. "When I was a boy," he told the writer, "an English regiment was quartered on our farm. One day three hart beeste sprang up on the veldt and half the regiment shot at them and missed. I and two other lads then brought our rifles to our shoulders, and each brought down one beeste. That is the way we shoot at the English."

One Tennessee regiment—the First—has been making history this hundred years and more. It was organized and commanded by John Sevier, when the State was merely "Tennessee county" of North Carolina. Sevier led it over the mountains, when revolutionary fortunes were at the lowest ebb, to fall upon Tarleton at King's Mountain, and turn a wavering fight into a hrilliant victory. Twenty years later Andrew Jackson was its colonel, through the bloody Indian wars that broke the power of Choctawe, Creeks and Cherokees. A little later Gen. Andrew Jackson posted his old regiment in the very fore front at the battle of New Orleans, where side by side with the hunters of Kentucky, its unerring rifles mowed down the red coats like grass.

Afterward the First Tennessee slept upon its laurels until there were grumblings of war in the Southwest. Many of its original members had gone to Texas, but they had left kinsmen a plenty to fill the ranks afresh. The renewed First Tennessee went to the help of "Old Rough and Ready," as Gen. Zachary Taylor was affectionately called, and soon showed that it meant to live up to its reputation. At Monterey, a walled and fortified town which Taylor was forced to carry by assault, it was the First Tennessee which set the first American fing triumphantly in the breach—and what is very much more to the military purpose—kept it there until it was carried farther forward.

All through Mexico it went, winning golden opinions from even the starch and stately regular army men. When it came home, after the old fashion, it kept up a sort of skeleton organization. A skeleton the civil war found it, but a skeleton that quickly took on life and strength. A state of war supervened late in Apfil; in May Tennessee seceded; in June, the First Tennessee, oddly brigaded with the Seventh and Fourteenth Regiments, left for Virginia, where the Tennessee brigade was assigned to Lee's corps, then operating in West Virginia.

The next winter Lee

The next winter Lee took command in front of Richmond, and the Tennessee brigade became part of Jackson's "foot cavalry." It stayed with him till his death, bearing itself soldierly through all his fighting, and more than once winning special mention for desperate and distinguished daring. At Gettysburg it made part of Pickett's charging column, losing more than half its number in killed, wounded and prisoners.

"The cankers of a calm world and a long peace" even could not destroy the fighting spirit in the famous old First Regiment. When the Spanish war came on, sons and grandsons, and great-grandsons of First Regiment men, went joyously into its ranks. They almost prayed to be sent to Cuba. The powers that be thought fit to send them to the Philippines instead. But it was October, '98, before they embarked, and they grumbled mightily that the fighting was all over.

Since events have proved their mistake, the regiment has lived up to its traditions. The regimental historian has an autograph letter from Admiral Dewey, saying:

"I am too happy to have an opportunity of express-saying:

"I am too happy to have an opportunity of expressing my admiration of this Tennessee regiment, its splendid work in the Philippines in actual warfare, and of its late colonel."

its late colonel."

Gen. Otis adds:
"Nothing can be said of it (the First Tennessee Regiment) which is not commendatory of it as a military organization. Next to its admirable fighting qualities, what has impressed me most forcibly is the universal good feeling and close comradeship which exists among its members, and the regard which the enlisted men have for their officers, who look carefully after their wants. As an admirable fighting machine, it has shown its excellence, both here and at Iloilo."

Col. W. C. Smith, commanding when the regiment went into action, died of heart disease upon the firing line. His successor, Col. Gracey Childress, Kentuckyborn, but by adoption a loyal Tennessean, will, therefore, have the distinction of being the last of a famous line of colonels, for he is bringing the regiment home—it is expected early in October—for a final mustering out. Under the new order of things the old regiment will lose its identity. It is not strange, therefore, that a history of it is now in preparation. To a degree it is a labor of love. The historian is getting up the book without regard to cost. But it is morally certain to pay expenses and perhaps something over. Tennesseans high and low, have a hankering to read of that which reflect glory upon their State.

This end is put through a hole in the window and the wearer of the apparatus can inhale nothing but the purest air, if he keeps his mouth closed. When he exhales air certain flanges in the nasal-attachment close and the foul air is discharged into the room from which it passes off by the door or ventilators in the roof. The entire apparatus weighs but thirty-nine grams when made of silver, and less if made of celluloid.

For lense-grinders, who inhale the fine particles of glass, or for lead-grinders, stone cutters, and other similar pursuits this device must prove invaluable. Even in cases of illness, when it is necessary to have fresh air without the least draught, this invention should prove most salutary. In the picture the inventor is shown using his device while he sits at his table writing, and perhaps even for healthy persons engaged in sedentary occupations and prevented from being in the open air as much as they ought to be the invention may prove of value. MAREORAMA" AT THE EXPOSITION. IT IS A MOCK OCEAN STEAMER, HAS CBEW, CAP-TAIN AND EVEN THE MOTION OF A SHIP. By a Special Contributor.

By a Special Contributor.

Possibly the most striking of the many novelties which will be offered to the visitors at the coming Paris Exposition will be the "Mareorama," as it is called. This is a great mock ocean steamer. It is arranged precisely like one of the trans-Atlantic vessels, has a crew and captain, and even the motion of a ship speeding through the waves. It does not move from the spot on which it is erected, but to those on board the illusion promises to be perfect. The passengers are supposed to be on a journey from Marseilles to Constantinople, and as the last bell sounds "all ashore" the harbor of Marseilles seems to recede from the vision, the vessel passes out to sea, and all of the scenery of the coast passes in review.

This is done by a large number of paintings, which unroll in panorama fashion, and are so realistic that the observers, if not overcritical, may really imagine that they are taking the sail. The vessel rocks and throbs as if it were really on the ocean, and this is brought about by the machinery which gives the vessel the required motion. Meals are served, and if you are not careful you will find your soup in your lap. Genuine seasickness will be the portion of all predisposed to that ailment, and it will be almost as if the actual voyage were taken, except that it will last but a short time. The coast of Algiers, Tunis, much of the Mediterrancan Sea will pass before the eyes of the passengers, and at last, entering the Golden Horn, the port of Constantinople will be entered. The painting of the panorama has been intrusted to Hugo d'Alexis, a graphic artist who has depicted the scenes in all their natural beauty. It will be a cheap and speedy method of making the journey, not to mention the novelty of experiencing all of the pleasures and some of the qualms of a long sea voyage, without the least danger of shipwreck.

 CARE OF THE BODY.

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS FOR ACQUIR-ING AND PRESERVING HEALTH.

Compiled for The Times.

CHRISTIAN

J. Petermichel writes to The Times as follows, in reference to an article on Christian Science which recently appeared in this department:

"Reading your article in the Sunday Times on Christian Science, I wish to give you a few facts regarding my case.

Two months ago I was, according to the verdict of the doctors, on the highway to a consumptive's grave. To make matters positive, I had a microscopic test made of the sputum, and the report was 'mixed tubercular infection,' this corroborating my physician's diagnosis of my case. The doctor who was treating me told me medicine could do nothing for me. For several months I had roamed around trying to find some climate to benefit me, but received no benefit.

"As a last resort I tried Christian Science. I did not have any faith in it, simply took the treatment to sat isfy my wife that I would do anything to get well. After five weeks' treatment I was cured. Have not taken one drop of medicine or etimulants since taking up the treatment, and am today, after being in Science only two months, a well man. Have during these two months done everything contrary to the advice of medical men (as I did not want to give Christian Science the credit,) have gone out at all hours, have been indoors eight to nine hours a day, studying and reading, and still I kept on improving.

"To what do you attribute this cure? According to the M.D.'s, my case was positively tuberculosis, and well developed at that. I have no alternative, but have to give Christian Science the credit. What else was it?

"My statements can be all corroborated by prominent business men of this city. I can prove that I am not devoid of at least ordinary common sense, but when the truth of this science is demonstrated, how can one help

"This letter is not intended to stir up any newspaper controversy, as I am not able to defend Christian Science. However, the facts are as I relate them, and I cannot help but believe them." There are several possible explanations of this correspondent's case, without it being necessary to resort to the theory of miraculous interposition-for Christian Science is, practically, nothing else. In the first place, the physicians may have been mistaken in diagnosing the sickness from which the correspondent suffered. It would not be the first time that such a thing has happened. In the second place, it has often occurred that patients who have been given up by their medical attendants have recovered, as soon as they dropped drugs and dectors, and gave nature a chance to do something for them. Possibly, this was what happened in the case of our correspondent. It will need a good many more arguments of this kind to convince the average citizen that the power of the imagination-or Christian Science-or whatever it may be called-is sufficient to promptly heal a case of consumption in the advanced stage But, granting that the case was not so bad as the doctors supposed, and that Nature was ready to commence a healing process, assisted by this beneficent climate, the mystery of the cure becomes less inexplicable.

The Times has no particular prejudice against Christian Science, as such, as long as it is restricted within reasonable bounds, and does not involve the suffering or death of innocent persons, who are incompetent to judge for themselves, but where miracles of this description are claimed, in the closing days of the nineteenth century, the onus is surely upon those who make such claims, and the proof must be overwhelming, if it is to carry conviction among the general

"Medico" writes to The Times: "Reading the synopsis of Mr. Burdette's excellent sermon this morning, delivered in Pasadena, Sunday, August 20, I am led to write you a few lines on the subject of heredity, or "Master, who sinned, this man

Heredity is not a fad or new thing in medicine. It is fully realized now that all life, both plant and animal, in this world, depends much, so far as its success is concerned, upon what its parentage was. The most ignorant farmer knows at least enough now not to plant diseased or poor seeds or to breed sickly animals together. The result of such action, he well realizes, would be a most disappointing crop, or animals which would make him the laughing stock of his neighbors. Yet the human race continues to permit its notoriously unfit to meet and propagate their offspring, to help to swell the ranks of the thousands who, to quote Mr. Burdette, fill the cold, gray prisons, the almshouses the saloons and dens of vice, and many of whom reach the scaffold, or should reach it. All well-informed medical men agree that few sins are more grievous and productive of more lasting injury to the world than the marriage of people unfit to marry, especially in a physi-nois married. The man suffered from hereditary scrofula, the woman from a chronic, but not severe, nervous disease. Neither would pass for many years after their marriage as notably ill. No doubt, daily, such marriages are consummated and rejoiced over in this city. Both man and woman were perfect morally. The man was a lay preacher, devoted to good works. The woman was a loving mother, and an angel of mercy, highly thought of by all who knew her. Yet, look at the result of this union between scrofula and a disease allied to epilepsy. Nine children were born in thirty years. Two died in infancy, leaving five boys and two girls. One of the boys is a respected citizen of a western city, but the fate of the rest of the family was as follows: One daughter paralyzed since her fifth year, an inmate of a free ward of a Chicago hospital; one daughter in the Illinois State Asylum for the Insane; one son in Joliet State Prison, for murder, done, his lawyers claimed, while insane; one son a drunken vagrant, a chronic nuisance to the St. Louis police courts; one son a victim of morphine, prescribed by a physician to allay his terrible nervousness; one son lies in a county hospital, almost unable to move, having a diseased spinal cord. Father and mother dead, after their last years had been made agonizing by intense mental and physical suffering.

"Now, was the above marriage a sin, or was it not? I think the medical profession generally quietly admits that the marriage of unfit people, who know themselves unfit for marriage, should be considered the most deadly sin in a the catalogue. But the remedy is not easy. Temperatee societies, churches, relief societies, all combined, waste precious time and money in a vain struggle with effects, rarely considering the cause.

"I told a prominent brother physician of the case I have related in these columns. He exclaimed, bluntly: Why, I would rather have had healthy Digger Indians for parents than your Illinois clergyman and his wife, worthy people as they doubtless were.'

"And the pity of it all is that the victims of heredity, as helpless as any cripples to be found in the world, are too often scoffed and sneered at by men who should know better. Heredity is not the cause of all sin, but it is, indeed, a terrible factor in the life of this

CHILDREN AND FRUIT.

A week scarcely passes, nowadays, without seeing some new and remarkable medical fad brought to the attention of the public. In many cases the only conclusion to be drawn is that physicians bring forward some astonishing theory in order to get themselves quoted in the papers, and thus obtain advertising and notoriety which the rules of the profession do not permit them to take in the regular way through the advertising columns of a paper.

One of the latest and most absurd of these fads is the statement by an American physician, who claims to have discovered that fruit and several kinds of vegetables are dangerous, not only to children, but also to adults. The details given in an exchange which prints this information are very meager, but the physician apparently bases his statement mainly on the alarming fact that children often suffer from disturbances of the interior department, after consuming unripe apples, watermelons or other fruit.

It is difficult to assume sufficient patience to argue seriously with such an absurd contention as this: That disturbances are caused to the human system by the consumption of unripe or overripe fruit. It is also true that people sicken and die through eating tainted meat, but we have not yet been adjured to entirely abandon beefsteak on that account.

That fresh sound fruit is the most healthful article of human food is a fact which cannot be successfully controverted, and it is to be hoped that very few people will be scared by the outgivings of this physician from giving their children as much fruit as they care to eat, or as the parents can afford

Fresh air is now the "official" remedy in the treatment of consumption AIR AS A The patient has to breathe pure air not only through the day, but all through the night, and the primitive and deeply-rooted prejudice in favor of closed bedroom windows is ruthlessly overridden. On the other hand, physicians are now protesting against the toleration many healthy people have for rebreathed air, or, as it is now called, 'air sewage." While some people appear to be almost immune to the poisonous effects of rebreathed or dirty air, others are intensely susceptible, but to all it is positively injurious. Dr. John Hartley asks: "Why do most men feel so tired after a few hours' work in a badly-ventilated room? and "Why is a long journey in a full railway carriage, even with a comfortable seat, so exhausting to many people?" It is simply the breathing of unclean air; the waste products interfere with the metabolism of nerve tissue. Women, as they grow older, are apt to live much indoors. Dr. Hartley believes that the fat, flabby, paunchy woman, whether purple or pale, with feeble, irritable heart and "inadequate" kidneys, is usually the victim of rebreathed air. the saloons and dens of vice, and many of whom reach he scaffold, or should reach it. All well-informed increasing ills which it has been the fashion to charge hedical men agree that few sins are more grievous and reductive of more lasting injury to the world than the marriage of people unfit to marry, especially in a physical sense. A case in point is given, one of thousands my physician could quote:

that the purity of the air breathed by the dyspeptic is quite as important as his regimen or his teeth.

The doctor gives an illustration of the pernicious effects of rebreathed air, which he witnessed while on a night journey by rail from York to London. The train was crowded, and the compartment he entered was close; so, being tired and fagged, he sat in the corridor by an open window, well rugged up, throughout the The compartment—running, English fashion, across the car-was completely shut off from the corridor by a glass door and windows, through which he could freely inspect its occupants. Two remarkably fresh-complexioned, wholesome-looking young fellowe got in after a while. They formed a striking contrast to the pallid and fagged-looking travelers already there. The windows and ventilators were carefully closed, and the newcomers, with the rest, settled off for a fourhours' sleep. When aroused on nearing London, they, like the other occupants of the compartment, were haggard and leaden-hued; their fresh color was entirely gone, and they looked and moved as if exhausted. CONVULSIONS IN CHILDREN.

One of the commonest troubles of young children is an attack of convulsions, or fits, which usually comes on suddenly. The mother, unless she has had previous experience of a similar kind, is apt to lose her head, yet the necessary treatment is very simple. A writer in the New York Ledger says:

simple. A writer in the New York Ledger says:

"The indications are unmistakable. There is a peculiar, fixed, staring expression, a cry pitched very high, and seeming to have no reason in it, the thumbs are drawn toward the palm of the hand, the toes are rigelly fixed, and consciousness is lost; the body seems rigid, breathing irregular, face at first pale, then livid and congested. This lasts what seems half a lifetime to the loving mother, but is only a minute, then all the muscles of the body alternately relax and contract, and a froth cozes from the lips. The breathing is very irregular, and occasionally the little one catches the tongue between the teeth, and with the foam that exudes from the lips some little blood may come. An attack of this sort is not necessarily grave, but it should certainly cause the mother to send at the earliest possible moment for her doctor, although the best of the work can be done long before the doctor comes, and it is my privilege to suggest some of the simpler treatment which can be attended to in the meantime.

"Get some hot water as quickly as possible, sprinkle a little mustard in it and be careful the water is not ment which can be attended to in the meantime.

"Get some hot water as quickly as possible, sprinkle a little mustard in it, and be careful the water is not too hot, for fear of accident. Remember 90 deg. to 100 deg. F. is about right; better begin with 90 deg., and gradually increase. Cold cloths should be placed on the head, and this should be kept up with the bath, for about ten minutes, or until the child shows symptoms of recovering consciousness; then have it gently wiped, rolled in a warm blanket, and put to bed.

"It is always eafe to use some little emetic, like salt and water; and if the pulse seems weak, rub wrists and ankles briskly to stimulate the circulation."

HOW MUCH

As to the amount of sleep required, there is a great difference of opinion among medical writers, and this is not surprising, because there is a great difference in the amount of sleep required by different persons. A writer in an exchange says:

great difference in the amount of sieep required by different persons. A writer in an exchange says:

"Different persons require different amounts. Some persons, eeemingly, do not need more than five or six hours of regular sleep. The majority, however, need eight hours. The amount would be governed considerably by the general state of nutrition of the body, and the character of the exercise which has produced the need for sleep. What is necessary to be accomplished in the sleeping hours is the building up of the nervous centers, and other centers of the body, and to repair the waste that has taken place during the day. If the state of nutrition is good, and there has been a healthy working of the nerves during the day, with such a degree of physical exercise as has left the circulation of the body in an even-balanced condition throughout the entire system, the process of repair and restitution will go on readily and rapidly. On the other hand, if the individual is suffering from dyspepsia, and his body is filled up with poisonous products, either from digestive trouble or from lack of appropriate exercise, then the repairing processes during sleep will be healthy, and a longer time may be required to establish a less sound state of the nerves than with such individuals where the conditions are more nearly perfect."

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.

In Good Health, W. H. Riley, M.D., superintendent of the sanitarium at Boulder, Colo. published the results of a series of experiments made by him on animals to show the effect of alcohol on the functions and structures of the stomach. He comes to the conclusion that all alcoholic liquors do retard the digestion of albuminous foods to a very marked degree. the disturbance being in proportion to the amount of alcohol contained in the beverages. This is in accordance with the conclusions arrived at by other investi-gators along the same line.

MEAN TRICK ON A WOMAN.

[New York Letter:] She was a prim woman of buxom figure and uncertain age. As she entered the "L" car at Twenty-third stret her eye brightened when she saw that there was a cross seat vacant, and she dropped into it with a little sigh of satisfaction, as if glad to rest herself. She had already touched the seat when an agonized voice, that seemed to come from neath her, squeaked: "Get off my neck." She jum GIGANTIC TELESCOPE. IMMENSE INSTRUMENT PLANNED FOR THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

From the New York Tribune.

ARIS, Aug. 1.—One of the most remarkable features of the coming Universal Exposition will be the gigantic telescope with which astronomers in 1900 and succeeding years will explore the heavens. Hitherto merely vague ideas have been formed in regard to this great siderostat which is of such deep interest to the scientific world, but last Sunday the writer chanced to meet M. Eugene Antoniadi, assistant astronomer of the Juvisy Observatory, who with great courtesy placed at the disposal of the readers of the Tribune such facts and information as will present a precise and accurate description of this marvelous in-

It was at the initiative of M. Francols Deloncle, Minister Plenipotentiary in the French Diplomatic Service, that a group of ame ar astronomers decided to devise ister Plenipotentiary in the French Diplomatic Service, that a group of ame are astronomers decided to devise for the International Exhibition an instrument of exceptional dimensions and power, far exceeding anything before attempted. With this end in view, it was determined to give the object glass a diameter of 1.25 meters, or 49.2 inches—that is, 9.2 inches more than that of the celebrated Yerkes glass at Williams Bay, Wis., and 13.2 inches larger than that of the Lick telescope, at Mt. Hamilton, Cal. In order to utilize such an aperture to the best advantage, and especially to check as far as possible the obnoxious effect of chromatic aberration, it was decided not to subordinate, as usual, the optical work to mechanical difficulties by a reduction of the focal distance, but boldly to give the tube the enormous length of sixty meters, or nearly two hundred feet.

To mount such an instrument on an ordinary equatorial foot would be practically impossible, for, to say nothing of the tremendous weight of the tube and the consequent instability and fiexures to which it would be exposed, the dome destined to protect it ought to have a diameter of at least 210 feet, or 72 feet larger than the cupola of St. Peter's, in Rome, and 103 feet more than the dome of St. Sophia, at Constantinople. But this is not all. Owing to the apparent diurnal swing of the heavens around the polar star, the dome ought during observation to be in constant motion, so as to have its opening always in front of the object glass, moving with a velocity of fifty-three feet an hour. The eyeplece would, of course, also move at a corresponding pace, and it is obvious that the acrobatic feats the observer would have to accomplish in order to follow the movement of the instrument would better suit a vigorous athlete than the delicate frame of the man of science.

Siderostat Mounting

Siderostat Mounting.

These difficulties have been surmounted by the wise conclusion of the committee to adopt the siderostat type of mounting, such as has been perfected by the French scientist, M. Léon Foucault, a man of remarkable mechanical genius. M. Antoniadi uses the expression "perfected by Foucault" advisedly, because he points out that the principle of the siderostat was known a hundred years ago, when a clever London optician named Brown constructed "a telescope whose tube was always horizontal, and in which a plane mirror reflected the image of the object to the eyepiece." The siderostat thus consists of a flat mirror, so mounted that when clockwork motion is applied to it it will send in the same fixed direction the rays implinging upon it from a heavenly body. A telescope directed along the reflected beam will then enable the observer to scrutinize the object without troubling himself about the motion. The fixed tube of the great Paris reflector is of steel, very slightly less than 0.1 inch thick, and weighs some twenty-one tons. Its diameter is fifty-nine inches. The cylinder is formed of twenty-four separate parts, screwed together, and rests on eight cast-iron supports, placed on eight stone pillars. In order to facilitate expansion by heat, the supports can glide on a system of rails attached to the piers.

There are two object glasses, the one for visual observations, the other being reserved for photographic work. Each glass weighs 1600 pounds They are both mounted on a truck gliding along a railway, thus allowing of their easy transfer in front of the tube. The dyepiece is also movable on a railway, and the focusing is effected by a screw sixty inches long, uniting the two tubes. Should the mirror of the siderostat not perfectly follow the object under scrutiny, then the corrections in right ascension and declination can be made without difficulty from the eyepiece end by a most in genious contrivance. The siderostat proper, which weighs some forty-five tons, consists of a huge brass foot, foot, measuring twenty-six feet in length and as much in height and resting on a marble pier. The diameter of the great mirror is seventy-eight and three-quarters inches, or rather more than six and a half feet, and its weight, mounting included, more than six and a half tons. It is held in equilibrium by a system of levers and counterpoises, rolling in a well more than six and a half feet in diameter, filled with mercury. The mechanical part of the instrument was made by the celebrated Paris maker, M. Gautier; the lenses by M. Mantols.

Grinding the Great Mirror.

It was no easy task to grind and polish the surfaces of the colossal mirror and of the two object glasses. Here new methods had to be devised The plane figure of the mirror has been obtained by the molar action of the mirror has been obtained by the molar action of two flat metallic sliders. M. Mantois used the same process in grinding the object glasses, with this difference, however, that, owing to the curved surfaces to be given to the lenses, the sliders, instead of being straight, had the curvature of the disks. The rectilineal motion of the system thus gave rise to a cylindrical section on the glass which, however, in virtue of the revolution of the lenses on their axis, was transformed into a subarical surface.

The light-grasping power of the Paris telescope, as compared with that of the most powerful instrument now in existence (the Yerkes glass) ought to be as three is to two. But this will not be the case, owing chiefly to the presence of the glass mirror of the siderostat. Under a vertical incidence, mercury itself does not reflect more than 67 per cent. of the incident light, and here lies the gain in favor of the Yerkes telescope.

The accurate figuring, moreover, of disks of such enormous size as those of the great French telescope is beset with fermidable, if not quite insuperable, difficulties, and we have some reasons for doubting that the optical surfaces will be a success. Another point which will tell heavily against the performance of the giant will be its rather disadvantageous location in the midst of a vast industrial city and at a height of barely 150 feet above the sea level, contrasting in these particulars so unfavorably with the pure air, serene skies and high altitudes of our great American observatories. We are apt to forget somewhat too readily that we are actually altitudes of our great American observatories. We are apt to forget somewhat too readily that we are actually living in the bottom of a dense aerial ocean, in which currents of various temperatures and densities are continually streaming in all directions. The greater the height we rise above the sea level ,the clearer the air we get, though we can under no circumstances shake the yoke of atmospheric tremors. When scanning the heavens with the naked Sye or an opera glass, the obnoxious effect of these undulations does not make itself felt. But if we take an astronomical telescope of three inches aperture and examine the physical appearance of a planet with it, we will notice that the quality of the image is not always the same, and that occasionally it is positively bad.

Increasing the aperture, it is found that the blurring of the image from atmospheric instability becomes more and more frequent phenomenon. With an aperture of twelve inches, good seeing is rare. The effect is, of of twelve inches, good seeing is rare. The effect is, of course, much more nugatory in a twenty-four inch, the result being that with apertures of thirty, thirty-six and forty inches there are not five or six nights in a year when the instrument can be advantageously used with its highest powers.

Independently of these considerations the light grasping power of large telescopes, which in the hands of men like Hall, Barnard or Burnham, led to such brilliant discoveries, defeats to some extent its own end in the case of the perception of fine planetary details. Here small telescopes compete keenly with large ones, for if we refer to the history of the discovery of the most evanescent planetary markings, such as the canals of Mars and the spots on Saturn, it is found that they have been almost invariably made with telescopes whose apertures did not exceed ten inches.

When questioned as to his opinion of the results that may be expected from the colossal Paris tube, M. Antoniadi replied: "A careful consideration of all the circumstances cannot reasonably render us over sanguine. Even supposing the surfaces of the glasses to be theoretically parfect which will not be the case, we might cumstances cannot reasonably render us over sanguine. Even supposing the surfaces of the glasses to be theoretically perfect, which will not be the case, we might safely predict that it will never show anything very clearly on the moon with a power of 4000, which would cut down the distance of our satellite to sixty miles—a distance, indeed, quite different from the popular and sensational fallacy of 'La Lune a un métre! "There is, however, one point," continued M. Antoniadi, "in which the huge Paris refractor will beat all previous instruments of the kind hitherto constructed, and that is its great focal length. It will enable astronomers to take enlarged photographic views of the moon at a focus of twenty-two or twenty-three inches in diameter, and this will constitute a marked progress in the knowledge of the topography and physical constitution of our satellite."

The Development of the Great Southwest.

Comfiled for The Times.

[The Times will be pleased to receive and publish in this de-partment brief, plainfy-written articles, giving trustworthy in-formation regarding important developments in Southern Call-fornia, and adjoining territory, such articles to be confined to actual work in operation, or about to begin, excluding rumors and confunction of the properties. contemplated enterprises.]

The Water Cutlook.

GARNER CURRAN, manager of the Los Angeles branch of Allen's Press Clipping Bureau, has returned from a 400-mile trip around Southern California. Part of the work of the press clipping bureau is to supply financial and development news to the great trade centers.

Mr. Curran states that he found nearly all sections in much better condition than anticipated. Most of the fruit is in excellent shape. A few lemon trees are dropping most of their fruit, but generally quality and higher prices will make up the loss in quantity. The dry year ghost has evaporated. There is plenty of water under the ground yet; if people only have the ambition and means to develop it.

There are plenty of small unimproved valleys that could be planted to alfalfa and irrigated, to support all the live stock now in the country.

In an interview in the San Diego Union of August 14, Mr. Curran said: "This is my fifth visit here, but the first time I have ever seen what you call your back country. The trip was a great surprise to me. El Cajon Valley is a gem. It is not as picturesque as the Ojai Valley in Ventura county, but is larger and in higher state of cultivation, owing to its excellent irrigating system. I have spent fifteen years in Southern California, and visited nearly every town of importance in the seven southern counties, and I can truthfully say that I saw little effect of the two dry seasons we have just passed through. Although your immense reservoirs are nearly empty, and the lack of a normal rainfall this winter would doubtless prove very disastrous here as elsewhere, yet I think San Diego county is as well prepared for a dry year as the neighboring counties.

"One reason why I have investigated this matter so thoroughly is because the impression has gone abroad that you are Jrying up down here, and that another dry season would add this region to the great American Desert."

In speaking to a Times representative, Mr. Curran aid: "This dry year 'so-called,' has proved a godsend to many. In the first place every dealer in ma-chinery, pumps, pipe, and windmills, has made more money this year than ever before. We had one subscriber stop the clipping service two months because the could not keep up with his orders. Many of the large implement houses would doubtless have had a deficit this year if they had not handled pumps and irrigating supplies.

"Besides being a benefit to these lines of trade all over the State, this drought has taught the farmer to depend on the waters that are under the earth. That there is plenty of water to be had by pumping, The Times has already shown in its articles on August 15. That special article was read by nearly every one in Southern California, I should judge by the way I heard it discussed. It created renewed interest in the sub-it discussed. It created renewed interest in the subject.

"In talking with Mrs. Alice L. Armour, editor of the Orange Post, she proudly called my attention to the fact that Orange county, although the smallest of the seven southern counties, had the largest number of inches of developed water, the number being 12,000; and that their rate was the lowest, being only $3.80 per inch, while Redlands paid as high as $27.50. When I reached Redlands, I called the attention of a citizen to the great difference in price and asked him if this was correct. He smiled wisely and said: 'Yes, but what other place in the world can afford to pay that price and yet net the orange-grower $300 per acre?' Redlands could afford to pay $50 per inch rather than risk the loss of her orchards.

"There is still another lesson to be learned, that is 'Forest Preservation.' An immense reservoir is not the

"There is still another lesson to be realised, that "Forest Preservation." An immense reservoir is not the only essential for an abundant and continual water supply, witness this fact in the dry bottoms of the great Sweetwater and the Bear Valley dams.

"The Sweetwater dam is 100 feet high and the reservationed drought has "The Sweetwater dam is 100 feet high and the reservoir covers 1000 acres, yet this continued drought has proved too much even for this immense storage system. The eurrounding mountains are barren. They should be planted to trees. If private funds cannot be raised for this purpose, the State should make an appropriation. We could dispense with State fairs for a few years and spend that money in planting forests. "Mountains covered with trees are the best reservoirs. The evaporation of a reservoir amounts to about four inches per year. If snow falls on a barren hillings the evaporation will probably amount to one-half, side, the evaporation will probably amount to one-half.

"A remarkable fact was stated about the snowfall in the San Bernardino Mountains this year. There was less snow in the mountains than rain in the valleys.
It is generally the opposite. In some places the soil less snow in the mountains than rain in the vaileys. It is generally the opposite. In some places the soil was absolutely dry; evaporation had absorbed the entire snowfall. Just stop and consider a moment what that loss means. It means much more than the loss of surface streams. It means that the underground streams will run dry—and when that calamity occurs there will be a dry year worth talking about. "Every little side canon should have numerous small dams constructed at favorable points, under direction of civil engineers, to aid in supplying these underground cated here. This is the factory and salesroom of the Pacific Optical Company, of which S. G. Marschutz is the proprietor. It has grown from a small beginning in 1886 to its present importance, covering an area of 4000 square feet and a large basement. In 1886 Mr. Marschutz worked at his trade alone, without any assistants. Now he employs six regular assistants and two travelers. Those who are informed on the subject say that there is, outside of New York City, no other optical establishment fitted up with such complete appliances and machinery as this.

The company does a wholesale as well as a retail business, from San Francisco to New Mexico, while for certain goods, such as a new patent spectacle known as the "aurocone," the goods have been introduced in the East and in England, from which sections orders are being regularly received.

In the rear of the establishment is a grinding plant for the manufacture of lenses, driven by an electric motor. The firm maintains offices in New York and in Nuremberg, Germany.

Fish and Ice.

THE San Pedro Fish and Ice Company has started operations at its recently completed plant in San Pedro. The plant has a capacity of freezing seven tons of ice per day, and there is surplus power sufficient to distill the water of which the ice is made and supply refrigeration for chambers in which to keep the manufactured ice and frozen fish. The company is also manufacturing distilled water for domestic con-

Increased Water Supply.

LL the mountain streams along the Sierra Madre Range, Lytle Creek, Etiwanda, Cucamonga, San Antonio and those farther west are reported to be giving a largely increased flow of water since the earthquake. The Chino Champion says:

"Etiwanda Creek has increased from sixty to 175 inches, and San Antonio Creek has increased over fifty inches. The increase seems to be permanent, although it was thought at first that it would soon fall down again. The earthquake seems to have loosened some of the strata in the mountains, which is allowing the pent-up waters to escape into the streams."

Oil at Anaheim.

HE increasing price of oil and the success that has attended recent explorations have greatly stimulated development work and several new sections are coming to the front. The Santa Ana Blade says: "Uriah Shaffer of Orange, who owns a tract of land just north of the Santa Ana River, and west of the Southern Pacific track, may find himself an oil magnate some of these days. Mr. Shaffer recently had a well bored on this place to a depth of 340 feet, and last week Baker & Son put him up a fine pumping plant. The plant was operated some Saturday, and yesterday was put in trim running order. The pump had not been running long before it began to bring a mixture of oil and water to the surface, and when the Blade's informant left the well last night, the stream showed a very high coloring of oil. The junior member of the firm of Baker & Son is very enthusiastic, and believes that by sinking the well a little deeper a rich strike of oil will be made." "Uriah Shaffer of Orange, who owns a tract of land

"Optical Goods.

It is creditable to the enterprise of this city that the largest optical establishment in California, not excepting San Francisco, is located here. This is the factory and salesroom of the county. The Oxnard Courier says:

"One of the most pregnant indexes of Oxnard's steadily-increasing population is a record kept by Conductor S. L. Humphrey of the Southern Pacific line. He says that the average daily arrival in this city by stage and rall is fifty people, while the departures only average twenty to twenty-five persons. There is no man in a position to judge better than Mr. Humphrey, and he says these figures are no exaggeration. It is not an exceptional thing for him to have forty or fifty passengers on the 11:35 a.m. train. Conservative estimates place the present population of Oxnard at 2000 souls. This is, of course, during the rush of the campaign now on. What our population will remain during the quiet season of planting and construction is as yet one of the things to be revealed hereafter; but those who are on the ground and understand the conditions surrounding the building of Oxnard have no fear for the future."

Pineapples.

HE pineapple has been cultivated for several years on a small scale in the Cahuenga Valley, near Los Angeles, also in San Diego county. The San Diego Union says:

Union says:

"Charles Foreman, who owns a forty-acre ranch between this city and La Mesa, is making a success of the cultivation of the pineapple. He studied the plant while on a visit to Hawaii some time ago, and upon his return home decided to investigate the adaptability of San Dego soil for its culture. He set out plants last February which have a good growth, and which thus far have required no protection, though it may be necessary later in the season to give them some little protection. Mr. Foreman believes that pineapples will prove a profitable crop here."

HE TIMES recently published a description of the tobacco-raising and cigar-manufacturing enterprise of a San Diego firm. The San Diego Union con-tains the following further information regarding this tains the following further information regarding this interesting enterprise:

"Should the coming winter be a wet one, a larger acreage of tobacco will be planted in this county than ever before. Messrs. Halstead & Johnson, who have been the chief promoters of the tobacco industry for several years past, will set out at least fifty acres and other ranchers will also try their luck with the weed. Hamilton Johnson said yesterday that despite the fact that he has been unable to raise any tobacco for the past two years on account of the drouth, he has unbounded faith in the industry, and believes that if the right kind of interest is taken in tobacco-growing it will some day surpass the fruit industry in this country.

"No finer tobacco can be grown anywhere else in the United States than in Southern California, said Mr. Johnson. 'In some respects our tobacco even surpasses that raised in Cuba, 'Ours contains less nicotine and is milder, not affecting the smoker in the least. We procured our seed from the Vuelta Abajo district in Cuba, where the tobacco used by the crowned heads of Europe is raised. Cuba, where the tobacco used by the crowned heads of Europe is raised. We found that the second planting from the seed is even better than the first. This could perhaps be explained by the fact that it took the plant some time to become acclimated.

"We are greatly encouraged by the fine showing made by the tobacco, but the dry years have of course prevented us from raising as much as we should desire. We have grown practically none in the past two seasons, but we still have a supply on hand of the 1896 and 1897 crops. There is a good demand for the cigars which we make, and we have yet to hear the first complaint concerning them. We cater only to the Southern California and Arizona trade, not carring to introduce our tobacco in the East, until we have a supply which would be sufficient for any demand which should be made. You see we do not care to build up a market and then not have sufficient tobacco to fill the orders when they come in.

"Every thing will depend on the rains this year, for it is impossible to raise tobacco without water. We tried that several years ago to our sorrow. We had a patch out in El Cajon Valley two years ago that proved a fallure on account of lack of water. It was a favored spot, the soil being decomposed grante and well drained, and if we had had sufficient water the tobacco would not have been excelled anywhere else in the United States. But tobacco must grow fast when it once gets not have been excelled anywhere else in the United States. But tobacco must grow fast when it once gets started, and the best way to attain this end is with plenty of water and warm weather. Alkali, either in the soil or water, will affect the burning quality of the tobacco.

"We will not plant our tobacco until next May, when the weather becomes warm. If the season has been a wet one we will then set out as much as we possibly can. We will easily be able to get two crops during the summer. Three crops can be raised, but we have found that it is better to cut only two from one planting. My partner, Mr. Halstead is now in Hawaii, where he went to see if the conditions were favorable for the growing of tobacco. I have just received a let-

Beet Sugar.

THE beet-sugar season has opened at Oxnard and at Alamitos. The Santa Barbara News of August 23d said:

"The first car of sugar shipped by the Oxnard factory for the year will leave the factory yards this morning. It goes to Los Angeles and its outgoing will be attended by general rejoicing.
"During the next week a whole trainload of sugar will leave. There will be sixteen cars made into one solid Southern Pacific train. These cars will be distributed to various Missouri River points.
"The factory is one of Ventura's big things. These enormous shipments mean a great many things. During the season between 25,000 and 30,000 tons of sugar will be made. This means that from 183,000 to 200,000 tons of sugar beets will be consumed. Fully 500 men in all are employed by the company."

Regarding the beet-sugar season at Alamitos the Santa Ana Herald of August 19 contained the following:

"The crop is, of course, light this year, and will not exceed 10,000 tons, most of which will come from the damp lands west of the town. This tonnage represents only about one-tent the capacity of the factory, and will be consumed in a three-weeks' run. Some of the growers will harvest a full crop, in spite of the dry year, and tests already made indicate that the saccharine percentage will be high. The price will be the same as last year—$3.25 per ton for 12-89 beets, or in other words, for beets of 12 per cent. sugar and 80 per cent. purity, with a premium of 25 cents per ton for each additional per cent. of sugar.

"A force of 150 men will be employed, this number including every man inside the fence. Superintendent G. S. Dyer has the big factory in aple-pie order, and everything is in readiness for the campaign. At the conclusion of the season here, Superintendent Dyer, with a crew of experts, consisting of G. M. Bradrack, H. C. Lawrence, A. M. Masser, Roy Smith, D. E. Noggle, F. L. Norton, J. E. Read, J. Evans Miller and F. E. Smith, will go East, and the crew will be divided among new factories now being erected by the E. H. Dyer Company, at Grand Junction, Colo., Beaton Harbor and Holland, Mich., to take charge of the initial season at those works. This is certainly quite a compliment to the Alamitos men, as their transportation will be no small item. The excellent system employed at the Alamitos factory, however, is known among beet-sugar men all over the country, who are only too glad to procure the services of experts from that institution.

to produce the section.

"With a good season's rain the coming year, it is entirely probable that another big factory will be erected at Alamitos by the Clarks, as the beet acreage there will easily support at least one more."

San Diego Steamship Line.

THE Belgian, of the San Diego and Oriental Steam ship line, has been chartered by the government for transport duty. President Butler of the company gives the following information regarding the prospects of the line:

prospects of the line:

"Manager Tweedle, who is now in New York, is negotiating for additional vessels now on the Chinese coast, to take the places made vacant on our line by the withdrawal of the Belgian King and the disability of the Carlisle City. The latter steamer ran into a typhoon early this month on the Chinese coast, and was driven ashore by the violence of the storm. It must have been something unusually violent, for the Carlisle City is one of the stanchest of the California and Oriental steamers, and her skipper is one of the ablest navigators in our employ. The steamer will be laid up at Hongkong for some time undergoing repairs.

"The steamers to be chartered by us will be larger than the Belgian King and Carlisle City, if it is possible to procure any larger vessels in China or Japan.

ble to procure any larger vessels in China or Japan.

Large steamers, such as we want, are arriving on the Chinese coast continually, and I have no doubt Mr. Tweedie will be able to get just what we desire. There is certainly need of the very largest and best freight steamers that can be obtained. The amount of freight now contracted for and in sight exceeds our expectations.

"It is true, as Chairman Walker of the Santa Fé Raiload says, that the freight steamers of the California and Oriental line are to be supersaded as soon as pracicable by first-class steamers fitted for passenger as well as freight business. We have all along said that well as freight business. We have all along said that was our intention. There is no question that the San Diego route to the Orient will in time become the most popular across the Pacific.

"At present, however, we are paying strict attention to the freight business, and are building up a good traffic, though the demand for passenger accommodation has already forced us to give some little consideration to the passenger trade by procuring licenses for the Thyra and Carmarthenshire, which will allow those vessels to carry a limited number of passengers. Hereafter, as each vessel of our line reaches San Francisco, it will be inspected and given the same kind of a license. When the proper times arrives, and I hope it is not far distant, we will have first-class passenger vessels running out of San Diego to Japan and China. Such an arrangement will surely be made.

"There is more or less business to be done in bringing Chinese and Japanese immigrants here, for transhipment down the coast to Mexico, Central America and South America, but as yet we have entered into no contracts with the companies controlling this business. San Francisco catches most of this business, of course, on account of the large number of Chinese there, but it will not be long before hundreds of Chinese and Japanese bound for the south will be coming over on our steamers."

Earthquakes and Oil, T IS not only water that has been brought to the surface by the recent earthquake shakes, but also, apparently, some petroleum. The San Bernardino

Free Press says:

"Since the earthquakes last month the water in Lytle Creek has increased 400 inches. Now comes the report from Zanjero Hammond that on this water in the last two days a scum of crude oil has been perceptible.

"The truth of this strange phenomenon is backed by a number of residents of Rialto, who claim that the oil gathers around the pipes and the gates, for letting the water through, are all greasy and the oil is undoubtedly crude oil.

"While this may seem strange at a first glance, there is, nevertheless, a possibility of it. For with the coal mines in Lytle Creek Cañon and the earthquake playing havoc with the hills and peaks, is it not possible that a stream of oil might have been struck and had just found its way down to Lytle Creek?

"There are several reasons to believe that there is oil in these mountains, and that the earthquake has done a great deal to open up a stream.

"Whether some enterprising individual will make a search to ascertain where the oil comes from waits to be seen."

Creamery and Cannery,

HE Downey creamery, which was started about six years ago, has steadily grown, until it handles a large amount of milk, and is well provided with first-class apparatus for doing all of the work required of it. It has been of great benefit to farmers, providing a home market and regular cash for their dairy products. The Downey Mirror says: .

"This summer the Downey cannery entered upon an existence that promises to be as of far-reaching benefit to this town and the surrounding country as the creamery has been. While this country has been known as principally a dairy section, the fruit shipped from the Downey depot has ranked with the best in Southern California, but heretofore a large quantity has gone to waste for want of a market. It is evident now that the fruit industry in this locality has a future, and that there will be a growing demand for it each year. Instead of the fruit that could not be profitably marketed lying on the ground and rotting, it can be turned into cash with no curtailing expense. The chances are that next year the cannery will demand much more in the fruit and vegetable line and a larger force will be needed, thus giving employment to more people and putting more money in circulation. An enterprise of this kind goes toward building up all ines of business in any locality."

Beef from the San Jacinto Mountains,

CONSIDERABLE portion of the beef supply for Riverside is drawn from the San Jacinto Mountains. The Riverside Enterprise says:

"Mr. Stege, who does a big wholesale as well as retail business, is over in that part of the country now looking after beef cattle. The beef reaching this market from that source is of fair quality for this season of the year, and considering the further fact that the pasture year, and considering the further fact that the pasture ranges are not near as good as they might be A correspondent of the Enterprise, writing from Cahufila, states that the price being paid for beef on foot is from 3 to 3½ cents, which is reason sufficient for the very good prices the butchers are forced to ask for the choice cuts. Some beef still comes here from the Arizona ranges, but this is hardly as good as the home product. The Los Angeles wholesalers also furnish some of the local dealers with a good quality."

San Diego Enterprise.

SAN DIEGO firm recently sold to San Francisco a big bill of coffee, imported directly from the

A orient. The San Diego Sun says:

"Although but 100 bags of Mocha coffee were billed to Balleu and Cosgrove of San Diego on the S.S. Thyra, investigation discloses the fact that 300 bags

Thyra, investigation discloses the fact that 300 bags were imported by this enterprising firm, of which 200 bags were consigned to San Francisco to be distributed by Ballou and Cosgrove to merchants of that city.

"Upon the arrival of the Thyra in 'Frisco some little effort was made to find the coffee, but as it was in the bottom of the hold, the whole consignment was brought to San Diego, and thus it was that the Sun representative discovered that a San Diego firm had just sold 32,000 pounds of Mocha coffee, valued at something over $10,000, to San Francisco merchants. By the next steamer Ballou and Cosgrove expect a large consignment of tea."

IN TRIBUTARY TERRITORY.

A Randsburg Mine.

Y EORGE B. KENYON, owner of the Kenyon gold Mine, at Randsburg, has been visiting Redlands.
The Facts says:

"Mr. Kenyon has a good thing in his mine. He began developing the mine in April, 1896, and is now down 332 feet, and has taken out $135,000 in gold. down 332 feet, and has taken out $135,000 in gold. None of the ore sacked and shipped has run less than $100 a ton. The ore shipped last June averaged over $300 a ton, and the total output for June was a little over $6000. He says that the mine is producing as well as it ever did, and there is no indication of its pinching out. He has a two-stamp mill, and can run through it about eight tons a day. Besides his two sons he has two other men assisting him at the mine and mill."

CCORDING to the Arizona Sentinel, A. Bienkowski A proposes to start an egret farm at Yuma, and con-duct it on the same principle as an ostrich farm. The Sentinel says:

"The egret is a tropical bird of the heron family, and is found in great abundance at the mouth of the Colorado River. They have a white crest on the head, the is found in great abundance at the mouth of the Colorado River. They have a white crest on the head, the feathers of which are valued at $32 an ounce. It has been figured out that twenty birds will yield an ounce of feathers twice a year, or ten birds will yield an ounce of feathers every year, which would be $32 a year for ten birds. The birds have been, and are being, killed for their feathers, and as a consequence they will soon be extinct. Charley proposes to fence 160 acres of marshy land along the river bottom near Yuma, and domesticate the egret. He thinks this could be done by clipping their wings. He has several birds in his possession now, and they seem to stand captivity well, and are easily tamed. The scheme is feasible."

The complaint is frequently heard from the orchestra conductors in music halls that the number of waltzes appropriate as accompaniments to the acts of jugglers, appropriate as accompaniments to the acts of jugglers, acrobats and similar performances is so small as to compel constant repetition of the same tunes. Anybody familiar with vaudeville music can testify to the truth of this. A few of Waldteufel's familiar waltzes seem to be the limit of the average repertoire. None of the new compositions is considered satisfactory. The death of Johann Strauss ought to call attention to the wealth of appropriate music among his writings.
